President F. A. Middlebush Says:

I want all of you readers to know how very much the Administration of our fine University appreciates the efforts and accomplishments of our Alumni Organization.

Active membership in the Association is of prime importance to the welfare of our mutual interests. Unfortunately, many of our alumni lose contact with the University after they have left the campus but, through the Alumni Office, we are constantly striving to retain these friendships and continue to be of service to all former students and graduates.

I certainly hope that you will absorb, very carefully, these next few articles and will lend your support to our efforts to build an even stronger active alumni body.

The following series of articles represent the attitudes of the Alumni Officers as indicated by their name and office. On the shoulders of these men rests the responsibility of guiding your Alumni Organization toward bigger and better achievements. Their devotion to the programs that serve you is deserving of your sincere support and cooperative response.

First Two Years Show Progress

It was after much discussion and careful consideration, in 1951, that the Board of Directors instructed the Secretary to inaugurate our "Active Membership" program. Since the start of that program, all of us are convinced that it was one of the most important decisions the Board ever made.

Up until that time, THE MISSOURI ALUMNUS was sold on a subscription basis and its circulation was 2100. The first year under the new program, the magazine was sent to 2900 alumni. Last year with a small membership campaign in operation, the number of active members increased to 4100. About 600 have failed to renew their membership throughout this year; therefore the present total is 3500.

I know from talking with Alumni Officers from other institutions how long many of them have been working on their memberships and I can tell you that Missourians can be proud of the progress their Association has made in only two years. BUT—We can double this number.

If each of us will assume the responsibility of enrolling one new member, our organization will have accomplished something that others have worked on for many years.

Missouri has long been called the "Show Me" State—Let's show 'em we can do it.

RICHARD CHAMIER
Vice-President

Alumni Association, Financially

As Treasurer of the University of Missouri Alumni Association, I eagerly grasp the opportunity to acquaint you with the facts of our financial operations.

I have seen the years when our organization was totally dependent on the aid our Alumni could and would give. Needless to say, the years were lean as far as what the organization could do for you. In those days, you gave everything and the organization gave little in return.

A few years ago, the University agreed to finance part of our operation and this has proven to be an extremely fortunate arrangement for all concerned.

The University now finances the salaries of personnel in our office and the operating expense, including office supplies, travel, and equipment. Our Association finances every penny of the expense involved in editing and printing the MISSOURI ALUMNUS, the additional printed material now made available to you, and our other public relations efforts. Our membership fund is separate and apart from our University budget and is used only for the items you receive as an active member. Not one dime of membership dues is used for travel, supplies, or equipment.

Our plan calls for expanding these returns as our finances permit. Naturally, publication of our printed material necessitates the major expense. As our membership list increases in size, our costs will not increase proportionately. Therefore, we can return better and additional service.

I feel strongly that each of us has a responsibility of helping promote this membership program. I think it is interesting to remember that, unlike many schools, yes, even other state universities, our University does not constantly solicit financial gifts from us. Personally, I am in favor of a moderate plan of giving to educational groups, but I feel that we can respect our Alma Mater's interest in us and feel that an active campaign to produce a larger membership list of active Alumni members is only a small request on behalf of Missouri's interest.

HARTLEY BANKS
Treasurer

Why is Active Membership Important?

In order to indicate the importance of our active membership list, let me first give you a very brief summary of the Association's purposes, aims, and objectives.

Through the MISSOURI ALUMNUS, the organization brings to the active member information about classmates—what they are doing, where they live, how many children they have—all sorts of interesting details. In addition to this service, the Alumni Office serves as a liaison between alumni, between alumni and the University, and even, at times, between alumni and better professional opportunities.

The organization's office assists in the development of local Missouri Alumni clubs throughout the country and supplies them with speakers, movies, and other programs for such meetings.

YEARLY
MEMBERSHIP CARD

These publications printed exclusively for Active Members

UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

1 year	3 years	5 years	Life Membership
$4.00	$11.00	$17.00	$80.00

Class reunions are held every year on campus for celebration of the 10, 20, 30, 40, and 50 year anniversaries.

The Alumni Athletic Advisory Committee serves as an integral part of the University's athletic program and seeks to help maintain a sports program of high character.

The Alumni Policy Committee serves the University through many objectives. Their general aim is to help high schools, civic groups, citizens of the state, and legislators to understand the functions of the University and its contributions to all of the varied interests of community life.

The responsibility of maintaining address records of all graduates and former students is a tremendous job of the University. Our organization seeks to help the Lists Office overcome some of the many problems affecting this service.

Briefly, this should give some idea of our general aim. Now, about the membership program. Why is it so important?

The active membership program is the basis of our entire organization. Through a growing list of active members, we can coordinate our activities and provide more benefits, as well as increase the quality of these benefits.

I hope that each of you will join with our efforts in helping achieve our objective of 7,000 members.

DUTTON BROOKFIELD
Vice-President

Comparison With Other Institutions

It may be interesting to note how our active membership program compares with alumni groups affiliated with other institutions.

A most significant fact is that our membership plan is only two years old. Every other institution listed in the table below has been operating a similar program for many, many years. Our goal is to build your program to a comparable one as far as size and service are concerned.

It can be done. As you read the following table, just imagine the possibilities of our growth.

School	Number of Active Members	Annual Dues
Ohio State	24,000	$5.00
Purdue	11,000	5.00
Wisconsin	19,000	5.00
Minnesota	14,000	4.00
Illinois	18,400	4.00
Northwestern	12,000	5.00
Michigan	13,500	4.00
Indiana	12,000	3.00
Iowa	3,800	5.00
Kansas	11,300	4.00
Kansas State	6,500	4.00
Nebraska	6,000	4.00
Colorado	6,700	5.00
Iowa State	4,800	4.00
Oklahoma	9,500	4.00
Missouri	3,500	4.00

Let's show everyone that we can do in three years what it has taken other schools many years to accomplish.

All we have to do is enroll one new member each—How about it, will you lend your help?

BUS ENTSMINGER
Alumni Secretary

Now—Here's What YOU Can Do

On the following pages you will find listed the names of our active members. We hoped to be able to list addresses, but space would not permit. Therefore, the list is categorized by states. Any name that does not appear indicates that the person has simply failed to notify us of his or her desire.

You will find many of your personal acquaintances absent from this list. Not because they have refused, but because they are not aware of this program. You can provide the missing link. You know how much you enjoy benefits of active membership; therefore, you are the one to contact personally the alumni in your locale and enlist their membership.

Just as a reminder of all the items an active member receives, the next page graphically illustrates every piece of printed material.

Our goal is 3500 new members. Only you can help us achieve this goal. Pick up the phone—Now—better still, pay a personal visit to some fellow alumnus, take this return addressed envelope, and enlist his interest in our new program.

Needless to say, we will accept any number of new "active members." You don't have to stop at one but, if you will perform this little duty, you'll be responsible for a great achievement.

In the two short years under this reorganized program, the Association has made a remarkable development. It can compare favorably with other Associations, even though it has a late start.

You can put it "over the top"—Will you?

ALUMNUS EXPANDS

As many of you know, our goal for some time has been to develop a broader program of alumni activities, and certainly a basic part of our program is publishing the Missouri Alumnus.

Because of your support of our program and the increase in the number of active memberships, we have been able to make what we believe is a positive step toward the goal of serving you better.

This move is the selection of Jack C. Taylor of Columbia as editor of your Missouri Alumnus. He has had years of newspaper experience, knows many alumni in Missouri and other states, and will be able to make more personal contacts for the Alumnus than has been possible for editorial staff members in the past. His work on the magazine begins with the February issue.

Jack was a student at the University from 1928 to 1930. He left school to take a reporting job on the Capital at Sedalia, Mo., and later served as news editor six years. Moving on to Canton, Ill., he was managing editor of the Ledger for five years, then he joined the Associated Press. He served with the AP during the war years in Chicago and New York. Coming back to Missouri in 1945 he handled advertising for the Missouri Press Association for six months, then went to the Missouri Farmers Association where he edited two house organs for nearly three years.

Since February 1949 he has been Assistant Director of the Office of Public Information at the University of Missouri. He will continue in that position on a part time basis.

His wife is the former Mary Elizabeth Brossart, '30. They have three sons.

In addition to his editorial duties, Jack will have charge of the advertising and at first will devote much of his time to that phase of the magazine. Since one of our goals is a larger Alumnus, it is an important phase.

He "grew up" on weekly newspapers in Texas and still believes the most widely read items are the homey little "personals" about people you know. His idea of the best editorial staff the Alumnus could possibly have is "a great corps of volunteer correspondents to report on the doings of Missouri graduates and former students." He says letters from his old friends would produce several columns of such news.

With our staff now enlarged, we look forward to a period of greater service to you through your Missouri Alumnus.

MISSOURI MEDICAL SCHOOL To Follow Trends In Modern Medical Education

by Dean Roscoe L. Pullen
Missouri School of Medicine

By the expansion of its two year program to the four year curriculum leading to the degree of Doctor of Medicine, the University of Missouri has embarked upon an unparalleled opportunity to serve the people of Missouri in the advancement of all types of health education. Problems there will be, and always have been, but medical education has never held greater promise than that which is available today. Medical education of all forms, whether undergraduate, graduate, post-graduate or the training of ancillary or paramedical health personnel (i.e., technicians, physiotherapists, etc.) is in a state of flux and it is fitting that some of the current concepts of health education be reviewed briefly, especially as they relate to undergraduate medical education.

Though recognized as the paramount function of the medical school, the purposes, methods and philosophy of undergraduate medical education are being subjected today to painstaking review and analysis. The reasons for such intense interest in undergraduate medical education are to be found in the changing conditions which the physician confronts in the practice of medicine. Aside from the rapid advances in the scientific aspect of medical practice, the socio-economic trends of our country over the past decade are influencing medicine as such forces have never before. The outstanding trends in this regard are: the increasing longevity of our society; the increasing urbanization of our society; the geographic mobility of our population; the increase in numbers of chronically ill and incurable patients; alterations in the family as a unit in the American way of living; the growth of pre-payment insurance programs; and, changes in the physician population.

Medicine is not an isolated science; it calls on and utilizes the contributions from every scientific field that will improve the health and welfare of the people. The brilliant advances in medical knowledge have posed challenges of staggering proportions to medical education. Imagine the alterations in current medical teaching that would result if a new drug were proved effective for cancer; or an enzyme that would accelerate manyfold the restoration of injured tissue could be found; or there were discovered a cheap, nontoxic, nonhabit-forming drug that would alleviate the diseased mind. The body of medical knowledge that should be taught to the student today is so great as to defy successful teaching, not to mention comprehension by the student. Furthermore, the tempo of progress is so rapid that certain teachings of today may become obsolete by the time the student is ready for practice. Faced with this dilemma, medical faculties advocate the teaching of the principles of medicine and recognize that the four year curriculum is insufficient preparation for medical practice.

There are other problems of the undergraduate medical curriculum which are receiving attention at the present time. Medical practice is, for the most part, an individual affair, the relation between one doctor and one patient, one at a time. As a consequence, medical teaching takes on the concept of individuality and the better medical faculties are those which adhere to a low ratio of students per teacher. Yet this concept, desirable though it is, tends to restrict the number of students in each class, elevates the costs of medical education and augments the shortage of skilled teachers within the medical schools.

The individual concept of medical teaching, stressed so effectively in the past, is now threatened by scientific progress in many fields. For example, in the management of cancer in particular, statistical knowledge of the probabilities, morbidity and mortality of all procedures which might be employed must be known and understood so that biostatistics takes on a new significance in undergraduate medical education. Mass screening techniques, such as the chest x-ray program sponsored by the Public Health Service and Tuberculosis Association which utilizes mobile units which can be taken to any part of the country, now bring to light many incipient or asymptomatic processes, which might otherwise be obscured for long periods of time and pose special problems in effective management. Periodic health examinations for insurance, for industry or for other reasons, are additional examples of the mass or group approach to disease. The advent of new drugs, hormones and the like, have expanded greatly the effectiveness of the general physician and have broadened the scope of his practice. The developments in laboratory techniques not only broaden the observations of disease, but make possible the employment of non-medical personnel in medical practice, thereby enlarging the physician's usefulness to his practice.

These and other developments in medical science are profoundly affecting medical education at the present time. Experiments in all aspects of the medical school curriculum are in constant progress, each designed to improve the effectiveness of teaching methods or to fill a gap in preparation for practice. On certain principles there is complete agreement: The undergraduate medical curriculum does not constitute adequate preparation for practice, there is need for continuing research and experimentation in all phases of medical education; the student should be indoctrinated early in the necessity of continuing study for each and every day that he may practice medicine; the practice of medicine (and thereby medical education) is subject to influences other than scientific progress; and, finally, the physician trained in the observations of disease by the principles of bedside diagnosis is admirably equipped for whatever changes that may occur in medical science.

This all leads inevitably to another conclusion which has been generally recognized by doctors—that there is need for continued education and training throughout their careers. Although there is come confusion about whether to call this continued learning process "postgraduate medical education," "graduate medical education," or "continuing medical education," since these terms imply various things to various people, its value cannot be doubted. The individual need is manifested over the past two decades by the steady increase in numbers of young doctors who remain in hospitals for two, three, four years or longer after receiving their degree. Although most of these men become specialists, many of them, particularly in very recent years, are taking this training preparatory to general practice. Group recognition of need for continued learning is indicated by the requirement of the Academy of General Practice, a voluntary association whose membership is limited to general practitioners, that to maintain membership a doctor must attend lectures and courses a minimum of 50 hours per year.

One of the striking changes in the medical picture during the past two decades, and in particular during the immediate post-W.W. II period, has been the increasing numbers of specialists. In the past ten years, specialists have increased by 98% while general practitioners have decreased by 13% compared with the previous numbers of doctors in each category, with a general increase in physician population of 19%. This shift in the ratio of specialist to general practitioners presents pedagogic difficulties in providing suitable postgraduate study programs. While, theoretically at least, the general practitioner covers the entire field of medicine in his work and hence should be interested in any and all information, the obscure diagnosis, highly technical surgery, or involved statistical analysis, all of value for the specialist in that field, are of little value or interest to the general practitioner. It is hard, therefore, to plan courses or meetings where these diverse groups can meet together. As a consequence, except at the large state, regional or national meetings where sessions of all groups can be arranged, general practitioners and the various specialists tend to be grouped into their own categories for most efficient instruction.

In general, the specialists have a somewhat easier field to define. His field is more clear cut and sharply defined, his study habits inculcated during the three to five years of his specialty training tend to persist, he has more free time (at least in many cases) in which to study, and, as a rule, he can get away from his practice for a few days to take a special course or attend a meeting without undue hardship to his patients. The general practitioner, on the other hand, is often the only doctor in an area which imposes a hardship on his patients should he leave for a meeting. His time is usually largely taken up day and night with his practice, leaving little time to study. His field of endeavor is so broad that it cannot be delineated clearly which makes for spotty coverage in postgraduate educational efforts.

It is to the general practitioners of Missouri that our school is first turning its attention in an effort to help. In cooperation with the Missouri Academy of General Practice, members of our faculty are presenting discussions of topics particularly useful to the general practitioner at regular meetings held here in Columbia, as well as elsewhere in the State of Missouri. As our faculty grows in size and strength this operation will probably increase. Later our attention will also be drawn to postgraduate education in the various specialties. But, as our purpose is to serve Missouri and Missourians, a large portion of our energy will always be directed toward the general practitioners who care for such a large portion of our population.

At 8:00 a.m. December 14, construction began on the building of the four-year Missouri Medical School

Dr. Elliff Subject of a Book

Dr. Joseph D. Elliff, Professor Emeritus of High School Administration at the University of Missouri, who observed his 90th birthday Dec. 31, is the subject of a book, "Life and Educational Contributions of Joseph D. Elliff," which has just come off the press.

The 150-page book is based on a dissertation of the same title, submitted by Lester L. Tracy, Jr., as a requirement for the Doctor of Education degree, which he received from the University in June, 1951. Tracy is now head of the placement bureau at Kansas State Teachers College, Pittsburg. Phi Delta Kappa, professional fraternity for men in education, is the organization sponsoring publication of the book. During the holidays Dr. Elliff has been sending advance copies of the book to friends.

Dr. Elliff still participates in educational activities, and as recently as March 18, 1953, appeared before the House Appropriations Committee in behalf of Lincoln University at Jefferson City, as a member of the Board of Curators of that institution.

In Sept. 1953, Dr. Elliff completed his forty-ninth year of association with the University of Missouri, and his seventy-second year in the field of education. His influence on education in Missouri is indicated by this statement by the late Dr. W. W. Charters, former Dean of Education at the University: "After his (Elliff's) official retirement, the president kept him on as an educational Bernard Baruch." This quotation appears along with many others praising the University's "elder statesman" in Tracy's dissertation.

Prof. Elliff had a modest entry into the educational field. He began teaching in 1881, in a one-room log schoolhouse in the Polecat District of McDonald County. A little over half a century later, when he was named professor emeritus at the University, he was recognized as one of the outstanding educators in Missouri, and was particularly noted for his leadership in Negro education.

In Memoriam

After the old bell in the Switzler Hall tower tolled for the burial of Dr. ROBERT LEE RAMSAY on Dec. 17, the Columbia Missourian paid him the following high tribute in its editorial columns:

In the passing of Dr. Robert Lee Ramsay, Missouri has lost a distinguished scholar and humorist, and Columbia has lost a well-loved citizen, neighbor and friend. Whether tracing the origin of the odd name of some little town or delving into Mark Twain's writings for more words to add to his "Mark Twain Lexicon," Dr. Ramsay always had fun.

When he collaborated in the writing of an "Introduction to a Survey of Missouri Place-Names" in 1934, he became fascinated by the study. He contributed a series of articles to Missouri newspapers, telling dramatic stories of the development of names of counties, towns and streets in the state. Each story reflected his sense of humor. "Our Storehouse of Missouri Place-Names," published in 1952 as a University bulletin, culminated two decades of research.

Dr. Ramsay encouraged his wife in writing volumes of poetry, which he shared with his students. That his sons have achieved success is no surprise to friends of the family.

Dr. Ramsay came to the University in 1907 from Johns Hopkins University, where he received the Ph.D. degree and taught English. With the exception of two years as a Johnston Research Scholar, he continued in the English department at the University until his retirement two years ago. At various times he taught during summer sessions at the University of Chicago, Johns Hopkins, Columbia University and the universities of Virginia and Wisconsin.

He became known as an authority on the English language, wrote several books and edited or compiled numerous other publications. His hobbies were reading detective and mystery stories and working crossword puzzles.

His years as elder and teacher of a men's Bible class endeared him to members of the First Presbyterian Church. Even while they mourn his loss, they cannot forget his glee at not being recognized by long-standing acquaintances after he shaved his Van Dyke beard a few years ago.

A Chinese student at the University, overcome on hearing of his death, told how Dr. and Mrs. Ramsay had befriended numerous foreign students, inviting them to the home, praying for them and taking them to see plays. He sympathized with them in their problems of adjustment and told them funny stories of his boyhood experiences.

In talking to friends as he visited the University campus within the past few weeks, Dr. Ramsay stated calmly that he would not live long. Instead of dwelling on his own health, he praised the nurses who attended him while he was in the hospital. Death came on his 73rd birthday, closing a life of friendly service to people of all ages.

A memorial fund for Dr. Ramsey has been established at the Presbyterian Church of Columbia. His students, now scattered far and wide, may have a part in this. He was an indefatigable worker and expected all of his graduate students doing theses on the Mark Twain vocabulary or Missouri place names to work as hard and enthusiastically as he did. Today they think of him with gratitude for the sound training in scholarship that he gave them and with affection for the warmth of his friendship.

Dr. ALBERT S. EISENSTEIN of the University physics department died Dec. 16 of a heart attack at Cornell University, where he was on leave of absence for the academic year 1953-54.

Besides his research in solid state physics, which Cornell is conducting, he was visiting professor and taught advanced laboratory classes in physics.

He received an A.B., from the University in 1939 and a Ph.D. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1942. Here he was appointed a Charles Kiepe scholar in physics in 1939 and was awarded a Gregory Fellowship in physics in 1940-42. He received a Frank B. Jewell Fellowship at M.I.T. for 1945-46.

He was a staff member of the M.I.T. radiation laboratory from 1942 to 1945. Here he was visiting professor of physics in 1946, associate professor in 1947, and full professor since 1952. He was named a member of the University Committee of Radio-Active Isotopes in 1951.

Dr. Eisenstein was an international authority on oxide-coated cathodes. Because of his reputation and influence, he was instrumental in bringing to the University Navy grants totaling $300,000. He invented a new way to use d o u b l e activators in oxide-coated cathodes, but with the true scientist's feeling that what he did was for the benefit of humanity, he declined to take out a patent on this process.

Yet eminent scientist that he was, Dr. Eisenstein lived in no remote scientist's world. He was a good citizen, as he often responded to civic calls. He worked particularly with the Boy Scouts. He was a good friend and a good neighbor, as he had a warmth in human relationships that is not always the gift of scientists. He will be much missed in the University, both professionally and personally.

He was born in 1917 at Moberly, Mo. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Leo Eisenstein; his sister, Mrs. Larry Thompson, who teaches music in the Marceline public schools; his wife, Edith Dennis Eisenstein, '41; and two children, Eric, 6, and Jane, 4.
