Miss Sugarbaker Reigns as Queen Of Homecoming

All the traditional magic of homecoming was there, just as it has been at Missouri each year since 1911. The pep rally, the house decorations, the queen, the parade, concert, dance, game (the Tigers won, 28 to 6), and friends—there were lots of old friends.

The queen was Geneva Sugarbaker, of Jefferson City, who was unaware of her selection for a time. When the results were announced, Miss Sugarbaker was in Hawaii visiting her fiancé, Marine Cpl. Bob Wilson, a former Tiger footballer who had been wounded in Vietnam. The queen is pictured on the cover of this issue with one of the University's better-known alumni, Chancellor John Schwada.

Homecoming featured special festivities for the Class of 1967 including a "Masters of the Forties" dance and divisional alumni coffees were held by Agriculture, B & PA, Engineering, Home Economics, Journalism, Law, and Nursing. There was also a Women's Centennial Coffee, and the Men lunched together.

Alumni also took part in the house decoration judging. Included in the six-member judging team were Marvin McCuen, former member and now president of St. Louis, and Dr. Gerald Johnson, of St. Joseph.

Memberships Pass 18,000

The Thanksgiving count of Alumni Association memberships reached 18,200 with approximately six weeks left in the membership campaign. The total is 20,000 active members by the first of the year.

Contracts Awarded For New Press Box

Back in 1916, Missouri's athletic committee authorized a modest expenditure for a "press stand". The wooden structure was to be built atop old Rollins Field at a cost "not to exceed $35 or $40, with the Western Union company paying for its own lines."

Last month, the University's Board of Curators awarded contracts for MU's new $50,000 press box—which will replace the present, outmoded facility. Construction started the week after the final home game with Nebraska.

Accessible by elevator, the three-story addition will include expanded space for writers, radio and television coverage, photographers—and food service. Also, more than 225 seats will be offered to contributors to the press-box fund, who will occupy the lower level of the box.

Demolishing the present structure also will create approximately 120 new grandstand seats. The press box is ready for a 1968 home opener with Army on Oct. 5.

University Asks State For $78.6 Million Support

To meet its growing four-campus responsibilities in instruction and research and to provide improved off-campus services, the University of Missouri has asked the General Assembly for $78.6 million to support its operating budget for the 1968-69 fiscal year.

The operating budget requests from the state include $43.5 million for the Columbia campus, including the Medical Center and the Agricultural Experiment Station; $10 million for the Kansas City campus; $8.2 million for the Rolla campus; $5.5 million for the St. Louis campus. Also included in the budget is $11.3 million for University-wide programs. A portion of these funds will be allocated during the fiscal year to the individual campuses as the specific needs become known.

In seeing "to meet the needs which have accumulated over a long period of time in the two older campuses and also to meet the massive needs of the two new urban campuses," the University has also asked the State for $62.5 million for buildings, maintenance and alterations, improvements and other capital items.

High priority requests for the Columbia campus include facilities for laboratory animals, remodeling of Stewart, Waters and Lefevre Halls, expansion of the hospital outpatient department, and a turbo generator and addition to the boiler plant.

The operational budget needs could, if met, be "a major stride forward in transforming an already good institution into a more nearly distinguished one,"

President Weaver said. "The desire for excellence is not self-service but is, indeed, based on the belief that the people of Missouri want to deserve excellence. Our young people are as fine as those of any other state, and we have a high obligation to provide them with as fine an education as is available in any state. Moreover the complex needs of the social and economic life of Missouri call for and must be met by evermore effective research and public services."

Dr. Weaver said that while the list of capital item requests from the state "may appear large, and even though the state has made available in recent years sizeable capital funds, it must be remembered that the University of Missouri is still endeavoring to catch up on many unfulfilled needs which have developed over a long period of time." He stressed that there are two new undeveloped campuses, at Kansas City and St. Louis, "which need sizeable, immediate appropriations for new facilities."

Loss of Leg Fails to Daunt Missionary Larry Ulsaker

Larry Ulsaker is only one of numerous alumni involved in missionary and welfare work throughout the world.

This is usually not the type of job one plans for all his life. As a youngster you often want to be a doctor, lawyer or business man. But in someone when you finish college, a desk job in a big city does not seem rewarding enough.

Welfare work is not easy. The hours are demanding, the living conditions poor and the results are not noticeable. But men like Larry Ulsaker can't give up the challenge.

"Larry had never considered missionary service until a guest at our wedding approached him," Larry's wife says. "We promised to give it some thought. One thing led to another and in December, 1964, Larry was commissioned."

Since his graduation from the University with a BS Agr. in 1959, he had been a soil conservationist in North Dakota.

In his first assignment in Laos, he lost one of his legs. But fitted with an artificial leg, Ulsaker returned immediately to finish his assignment. For two years in Laos and Vietnam, Ulsaker worked with rural development with the International Voluntary Services, one of the forerunners of Peace Corps.

Back in the states for a six months' leave this year, he and his family will again return to India in January for another two-year tour.

Ulsaker and his wife, Janice, were commissioned by the Board of World Missions, Lutheran Church in America, to serve at the Agricultural Institute in Allahabad, Uttar Pradesh, India. Although the Institute was founded by a Presbyterian missionary in 1910, it is now completely under Indian personnel.

"I was on the staff of the agronomy department, teaching soil science, plant physiology and field crops and conducting research on tillage of a cornwheat rotation and the establishment of alfalfa stands." Each faculty member of the program is assigned a class in better citizenship and Christian faculty members teach a Christianity course.

Their first year his wife taught physiology and home nursing, practiced nursing and directed the choir. The second year they had a baby boy, Tate. Last September they had a girl, Karla.

"Our general impression of the situation in India is best anybody who feels he has heard would soon start counting his blessings after becoming acquainted with the Indian problems.

"But on the other hand, our impression of India's people is wonderful. They are tremendous people and have been kind, helpful neighbors. These people fully realize the seriousness of the situation and are conscientiously doing their best to correct it. We were consistently amazed at the Indian farmers. With their impossible living and working conditions, they make great accomplishments.

The Ulsakers' next two-year tour will be spent under the Santal Mission in Assam. Ulsaker will be principal of the Garhampur Vocational Agricultural Comparing wheat varieties with the native Indians, Ulsaker helps train the people the best way to utilize their resources. "It would have done much better if our irrigation system hadn't broken down, preventing that last irrigation."

School. "The necessary buildings have been constructed, but the school is not actually established yet. We will be starting almost from the ground up."

There is no doubt that this work is inspiring. There is potential for a high increase in Indian agricultural production, especially now that goods, services and necessary technological inputs are more readily available to farmers. The need today seems to be in training men to utilize irrigation, chemicals such as herbicides and fertilizers and improved equipment.

It's no wonder the Ulsakers feel the compelling need to return this winter. "We hope to significantly help in training these ambitious young men to supply the demand."

Campus Commentary

by Bus Entsminger

One of the big subjects being discussed today is the financing of higher education in the years ahead. There are so many misinterpretations and so much misinformation concerning the relationship of private philanthropy to public and private universities that it behooves each alumnus of this institution to become more familiar with such information.

There are at least three major areas of misunderstanding.

- (1) Many citizens believe the public institutions are financed completely by the public tax dollar. This is completely false. Never in history has as much as 50 per cent of the total budget of your Alma Mater been derived from state tax sources. Last year the operating funds of the University totaled less than 46 per cent from state tax dollars, and the rest was supplied through fees, grants, and private gifts.

- (2) Another major misconception is that public institutions have as much as 50 per cent of the total budget of your Alma Mater been derived from state tax sources. Last year the operating funds of the University totaled less than 46 per cent from state tax dollars, and the rest was supplied through fees, grants, and private gifts.

- (3) Another major misconception is that public schools are financed 50 per cent from state tax dollars, and the rest was supplied through fees, grants, and private gifts.

This great country of ours has flourished partly because of a strong system of both private and public institutions of higher learning. The educational challenge ahead is more than either can handle by itself. All schools cannot be all things to all people. I, personally, am dedicated to the belief that our system of higher education must have a heavy concentration of strong, active, private colleges. There can be no argument that such a system also needs strong, active public institutions of learning. If either were eliminated, or even reduced in their effectiveness, the total educational effort by this country is bound to be weakened.

Let's build strong and active private institutions along the foundations upon which they were originally directed, and let's continue to serve the public in the manner that public institutions have served on the Land Grant tradition. But in doing so, let's also be realistic and recognize that just as private schools utilize public money, we as individuals, through our private philanthropy, through our corporate opportunities and through our volunteer work in various foundations, also must support public educational finances.

Around the Lairs

with Jean Madden

With the acceleration of the knowledge explosion and new emphasis for continued professional education, the tie of the alumnus to the institution through professional interests has become increasingly important. Most of the professional divisions of the University now have active and effective alumni organizations, which are in turn represented in the Alumni Association through the presidents of their groups sitting on the National Alumni Board.

Recent examples of the surge of interest in this area are reflected in the successful Law Luncheon which was held in Kansas City in early September; the AG board meeting which was held on the campus in early October; the Forestry meeting in late October at which Leo Drey was made an honorary member; M. D. Day Alumni meeting and reunion which were held in late October; the Vet Med Alumni banquet also held in late October; the Education Alumni reception in early November which featured the establishment of an official divisional alumni organization; the Journalism Alumni Luncheon in St. Louis on Nov. 8; the Engineers Alumni Meeting in St. Louis on Nov. 9 and the myriad of divisional coffees, receptions and open houses in conjunction with the same.

Other divisional activities in the offing include the Arts and Science Awards banquet on Dec. 5; the annual AG Alumni Bar-B-Que on Feb. 9; the Home Economics Alumni awards dinner March 15; the Nursing Awards banquet on April 20; B&PA Alumni dinner in mid April; Law Day activities in late April; and the Journalism Alumni meeting in early May.

All these give testimony to the increasing importance of this avenue of alumni expression. More and more, alumni participation seems to be following professional lines rather than class or geographic areas. And your Association is so structured that it is well qualified to serve these multifaceted interests.

One Month There's a Magazine;

The Next, a Newspaper Format

Since the beginning of the Alumni Association's new publication program in September, we've received several letters, each falling into one of two categories:

- (1) Where are the class notes?
- (2) What happened to that pretty magazine with the color cover you published once or twice?

The answer is that the "pretty" magazine alternates with a "class notes" newspaper.

As was explained in the September issue, the magazine concentrates on features designed to let you know what is going on at the University. The newspaper highlights classnotes as well as class Association and individual alumni features. We feel the new program does a better job on both counts.

Active membership $4 a year. Life membership $80.

To the editor:

I am in receipt of the notice of the annual Homecoming. Right now, I can't think of any thing I would rather do than to be able to travel back to Columbia for this event. It has been 68 years since I was a student at the University and a lot of happenings since then. About the only feature that would seem familiar to me would be the old columns. But there wouldn't be a soul there who could remember me and only one man, Jean Madden, with whom I have had some correspondence.

I must admit that this old boss ain't what he used to be. Up until two years ago a four-mile walk meant a pleasant 15-minute hike, but today it would seem like a long way to Tipperary. My 99th birthday happened on Nov. 4.

I will have with me to relate a few incidents, which might be interesting by comparison with today. I lived for three seasons at the old U. B. Club, that was on a strictly non-profit basis. There were no dues, no membership, and, excepting 40 dollars for a room together, each of the more affluent chaps who paid fifty for a room on the corners, facing two ways. We had to pay $1.25 a week for food, and our monthly dues had to cover the cost for the cooks and waitresses, and perhaps for the matron's family. In return for their board, one man was the treasurer who collected the hard-to-get dollars, and another chap got a lot of good experience in buying all our food as cheaply as possible. Believe me—if he was so extravagant to pay a quarter for three dozen eggs, or more than 10 cents a pound for T-bone steaks, or for beef rounds he had to give a good reason for his extravagance at the next club meeting.

In the summer and fall of 1898, I was on the Tiger team, which was so generous that it paid our traveling expenses and hotel bills when away from home. I recall once weighing myself raw before donning my uniform, and after a little over an hour of hard practice, topped off by a mile run, when I got back to the locker room I never put on my uniform by sweat alone. So we had to eat like a hungry horse to keep up our weight. For two months, I arranged with the food buyer to buy round steaks for me, which I consumed at the rate of a half pound per day, or at a cost of four cents a day. Some of the boys poked fun at me for being such a sissy, and not entirely satisfied with the regular six-cent meal. Nowadays, the only things that someone gets free is a glass of water and the menu. The cheapest item is a cup of coffee, another 25-cent cost. I think the boss of the war on poverty, Sargent Shriver, might have called us poverty stricken, which we wouldn't accept standing up or lying down. None of us expected to have to live on that plain fare very long, though we might have been shocked over the prospect of having to pay a 30 per cent income tax.

I admire the showing the Tigers have been making this year. My high regards to the boys on the team, from an Old Tiger.

Oscal Capps Has Article In Book, 'Outdoors USA'

Just released is the 1967 Yearbook of Agriculture, titled "Outdoors USA," which is a guide and handbook to the American outdoors, recreation, conservation and natural resources.

Oscal Capps, Arts '46, has a chapter on "When Fire Strikes Your Woods." He is State Forester with the Missouri Department of Conservation in Jefferson City.

Capps writes a short personal account of a fire last spring in Missouri and his interview with the farmer. He gives explanations on why fires spread and the scientific methods of extinguishing them. The 408-page book with over 250 pictures sells for $2.75 from the Government Printing Office in Washington, D. C.

University Press Has Busy Schedule

Some of the fall and winter books being published by the University of Missouri Press are:

"The American Revolution and the British Press 1775-1783," by Solomon Lutnick, published in October. The book explains the British editors' reactions to the war, which was sympathetic to America and in support of the opposition in Parliament.

"The Truman Period as a Research Field," edited by Richard Kirkendall, University professor of history. The book, published last month is the first large-scale survey of literature on this era. Six scholars discuss the foreign, military, economic and social policies of the administration. An appendix lists all the holdings of the Truman Library.

"Confrontation and Commitment: A Study of Contemporary American Drama, 1959-1966" by C. W. E. Bigsby, who will begin teaching at the University at Kansas City in January. A minor literary revolution arose from an aesthetic and social criticism of the American drama of the sixties dedicated to extending the metaphysical scope of drama and also extending its social utility. The study, divided into two sections—the theatre of confrontation and theatre of commitment—will be published in January.

"Richard Harris Barham: 'Thomas Ingoldsby,'" by William G. Lane, to be published in January. Barham's two series of the "Legends" were published in his lifetime and a third was published after his death, the "Ingoldsby Legends" in 1857. Lane examines the work of this unpretentious man and its place after a hundred years.

Missouri Wins First Cross Country Title

Missouri's runners, paced by Glenn Ogden, a second-year student, finished three of the top ten berths to win the Big Eight's team cross-country championship Nov. 11 at Boulder, Colo. It was the first cross-country conference championship for Missouri team, and a first for a winning total of 52 points. The Tigers also were undefeated in dual competition this year.

Marijane Meaker, AB '49, Authors 'Hometown' Novel

"Hometown" is the first hardcover novel by Marijane Meaker, AB '49. Previously she has written some 20 paperback novels under the name of Vin Packard.

Her book is a history of Cayuta, N. Y., and the story of the Ware family, and prosperity, depression, another war and the rise of the atomic age change make its way up this saga. The author grew up in upper state New York and now lives in New York City. The book was published by Doubleday in August.

Home Economics Gets Books In Honor of Adella Ginter

Books for the home economics reading room at the University have been made possible through a gift honoring Mrs. Adella E. Ginter, professor emerita of textiles and clothing. The fund will be used in purchasing books.

Mrs. Ginter, who joined the faculty in 1927, retired last year. She received the Gamma Sigma Delta faculty merit award in 1963 and is author of numerous publications on clothing and textiles.

Mance Taylor, Founder Of Nursing School, Dies

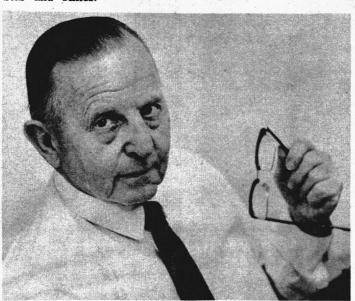

In September, Miss Mance Taylor died. She founded the School of Nursing at the University in 1920. Miss Taylor was the first professor of nursing on the staff, and in 1922 she was named president of the American Nurses' Association. Miss Taylor also was superintendent of nurses at St. Luke's Hospital School of Nursing in St. Louis and served as chief nurse of Hospital Unit, No. 21 in Rouen, France during World War I.

John Colt, K C Star Editor, Returns to J-School

In 1922, John W. Colt had a course in feature writing in Room 206 Neff Hall of the Journalism School. Today, retired from a long newspaper career, which included being executive editor of the Kansas City Star. Colt has returned to Room 206, but this time in a teaching capacity.

As a visiting professor this year, Colt is teaching a course in basic issues with Dr. John Merrill. "The students take up questions of crime, welfare—things in the news—and write interpretative pieces on them which are later printed in the Missourian. Colt, who reads and edits the papers, feels he's well qualified. "After all, this is the same type of work I've been doing all my life."

Graduated in 1923 with a B.J., the young journalist joined the Kansas City Journal in 1923 as a police reporter. He was a member of the Kansas City Star from 1924 until he retired last January, serving as reporter, copywriter, makeup and picture editor, afternoon city editor, news editor and managing editor. In 1960, Colt was named executive editor of both the Star and Times.

Serving also as consultant to the Missourian, Colt makes recommendations on the paper's coverage, makeup and overall effectiveness to the city and makeup editors. Since Eugene Sharp is one of the city editors, it makes Colt's job seem like the old days: "Sharp and I were in school together.

"But the Journalism School is much better today and naturally much larger. The students themselves are a lot smarter. I'd hate to try to compete with them."

Colt feels the students are more serious today, more aware of what is going on around them and more conscious of their futures. He recalls an incident many years ago when he was covering an obituary notice that had just been received at the Western Union office. It read that some missionary had died in Korea to which Colt asked "Where's that?" He points out that it was before the Korean War but nevertheless, students have become much keener today. They need to be just to get into colleges much less stay in. "All we had to do was walk in and register and show our high school diploma."

Other things were different in those days including prices of room and board. "I paid $30 a month for room and board in a house with 15 other boys."

One of Colt's fondest memories of college years was the first journalism field trip which was conducted in the Midwest during the entire summer of 1922. He and others accompanied Walter Williams, the school's founder and later president of the University. "Walter Williams was a great publicist, a wonderful salesman and a man who loved to talk.

"The journalism school now has become less a one-man operation and more professional. To operate a daily newspaper is an outstanding thing, and the Missourian is better than most newspapers of its size."

In 1959 the University awarded Colt the Missouri Honor Medal for Distinguished Service in Journalism. He had been president of the Journalism School Alumni in 1957 and president of the Kansas City Press Club, director of the Associated Press Managing Editors and on the national executive council of Sigma Delta Chi.

He and his wife have kept their home in Kansas City and a farm, but spend most of their time in an apartment in Columbia. They have six married children and 19 grandchildren.

Next semester Colt will have his own course. The following year? Who knows, Colt is just enjoying the present.

Library Receives Keller Collection Of Rare Volumes

The library of the late Albert M. Keller, prominent St. Louis investment broker and civic leader, has been presented to the University comprising more than 1,200 books, including numerous rare and distinctive volumes. The collection is now being catalogued by the University Library.

The library is a bequest from the late Mrs. Nellie Brown Keller. Keller's wife, Frances Keller, after her husband's death she said she was giving it to the University because of the institution's educational standing and million-volume working library, where the books would be useful in teaching and research.

The oldest volume in the Keller collection is apparently "Chardin's Travels," which was "printed for Moses Pitt in Paris Street, Westminster 1686, according to the title page, and is a chronicle, with Latin-inscribed map, of the travels of Sir John Chardin (1643-1713) in Persia and the East Indies.

A rare and unusual volume is "a summary of the life of Arthur Duke of Wellington from the period of his first achievements in India to his invasion of France and the decisive Battle of Waterloo June 18, 1815," as the title page describes it. Attractively bound in red and gold morocco, it has what bookmen call fore-edge painting: A color painting of an episode in the Battle of Waterloo done on the wide fore-edge of the book. It is not until the book edge is sloped to expose the picture. Dr. Parker says he knows of only one other example of fore-edge painting in the University library.

A first issue of the first edition of William Makepeace Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" published in London in 1848 is illustrated by the author. It is recognized as an authentic first edition, first issue, by a woodcut of the title page emblem, which was deleted from later issues because the subject protested.

With evaluation of the collection still under way, books thus far authenticated as first editions include works by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Joseph Conrad, Anthony Trollope, H. G. Wells, Sinclair Lewis, and Lewis Carroll.

LaReine Clayton Writes of Missouria

By GUS OEHM, AB '17 BJ '17

To read a new book, especially one authored by a person friend one greatly admires, is always thrilling. And when such a book deals with incidents, things and places which parallel those of the reader, the results are even more gratifying. Even when the reader does not know the author personally nor shares intimately the memories provoked, a good book about a generally known theme is always a delight.

"Now, Be A Little Lady," by LaReine Warden Clayton, who attended the University in 1917, has been recently published by Exposition Press, New York. It is about a little girl growing up in a closely-knit family in a small Missouri town in a long-gone era. It should prove most appealing to graduates of the University of Missouri and others connected with the school and the area. Both her late lawyer-father Hubert Pascal Warden, and her husband Claud F. Clayton, AB '15, AM '16, are graduates of Mizson, and the book includes several references to the University.

Not the least of the attractive features of the book are the author's numerous pen-and-ink line drawings of incidents and things and persons discussed in the book. These illustrations, scattered profusely throughout the 338 pages, help portray vividly what LaReine calls "the storybook world" of her childhood.

As Henry James Forman, former editor of Colliers magazine, says: "Now, Be A Little Lady" is probably one of the best-written and most penetrating narratives from a child's angle that I have ever read." This does not mean it is exclusively for children; it is meaningfully splendid reading for persons of any and all ages.

As pointed out by the publishers: "Here is a story laced with wit and nostalgia that captivates the reader from start to finish. The author brings to life a small Missouri town during the 1900-10 decade that was still steeped in the courtly manners and straitlaced conventions of the then recent Victorian era. The genteel traditions found a worshipful follower in the little redhead who regarded her elders as heroes and heroines, and who earnestly endeavors to follow her mother's dictum: 'Now, Be A Little Lady.'"

LaReine Warden Clayton has made a significant contribution to modern literature, and has done it well. She and her husband have two grown children, and the fact that the early training received by LaReine has prevailed is indicated by the very last paragraph in which she says: "And I, the young, erst married my Phi Beta Kappa beau in my early college days, so that now again I am part of a small, close-knit, devoted family; and again there are four of us, even as it was once-upon-a-time on South Jefferson Street" in that small Missouri town, which happens to be Mexico, Mo.

My reason for writing the foregoing is that LaReine's husband has had a profound influence on my life and career, although he probably doesn't realize it. As freshmen at the University, Claud F. Clayton and I shared a room in the YMCA at the entrance of the old campus. I was a freshman classleader and Claud was a halfback on the freshman football team. Every time he carried the ball against the varsity, I called for nine runs for Clayton, regardless of whether he made a gain or was thrown for a loss. And when I was debating whether to take up law or journalism, he advised me to enter the School of Journalism, as he realized I was not temperamentally fitted for the bar. I followed his advice and have been grateful to him that I did. Our close friendship lasted throughout our years at the University and after. In fact, I was his campaign manager when he ran for editor of the yearbook, The Saviour, which election he won by four votes.

Claud was registrar of the University. Later we were both on the faculty of the University of Arkansas where I became aware of the sterling qualities of his good wife, who in her book has more than verified my evaluation.

Graduate House Opened For Grad Students, Staff

The graduate faculty and graduate student of the University now have a Graduate House.

The House, at 612 Kuhlman Ct., provides offices for the faculty, a research services center and a faculty-student lounge.

It is a place to bring the faculty together promoting unity and "brain sessions," Graduate School Dean John Murdoch said.

The research services presently are offering secretarial help in typing manuscripts which will be submitted for publication. Later, Xerox service and student help may be added.

There also is coffee available in the lounge.

Glenn A. McCleary, Former Dean of Law School, Dies

Serving from 1940 to 1958 McCleary held the position of law dean longer than anyone else. He preferred to be remembered as a teacher, however, and the classroom was his chief interest.

McCleary came to the University in 1929 as an associate professor of law, was promoted to professor in 1931, and became acting dean in 1939.

Although graduated from Ohio Wesleyan and University of Michigan, the University awarded Deane McCleary an emeritus diploma in 1965. A plaque was presented to him by the law students at the annual Law Day in 1965 in appreciation of his long service and devotion to high standards of law education.

Survivors include his wife, one daughter, a son and one grandson. Remembrances may be sent in Deane McCleary's name to the University Law School Foundation.

Former All-American quarterback, Paul Christman, was master of ceremonies for the Chicago alumni gathering. He is color man on NBC's telecasts of professional football games.

Two Alumni chapter presidents confer. J. M. Longmire, BS BA '32, is president of the Milwaukee chapter. John Schram, BS PA '58, is president of Chicago's chapter.

Chicago, Jeff City, Homecoming

Planning began four years ago for what was the largest out-of-state alumni gathering this fall, the University of Missouri-Northwestern weekend Sept. 29 and 30. The Chicago alumni chapter entertained nearly 200 at a dinner Friday evening which included Paul Christman, master of ceremonies, Don Faurot and Chancellor John Schwada. A Bengal Brunch started Saturday morning off and after the victorious game there was a Tiger Toast. Back in Missouri, the Cole County Alumni held their annual barbecue on Sept. 21. The biggest crowd ever, the event was sold out at 300 people and others had to be turned away. It marked the first time President Weaver had met with an alumni group.

On Sept. 23 the Leaders' Meeting was held in Columbia. Annually held on the weekend of the first home football game, past presidents received tokens of their service. Also present were the Alumni Board, members of various standing committees, county chairmen and eight out-of-state areas represented by their chapter presidents. Both President Weaver and Chancellor Schwada addressed the group.

Homecoming as usual brought back throngs of alumni but this year in particular the class of '42 for their 25th reunion.

Jack Coffey, BJ '96, and his wife Margaret, Arts '28, visit with Chancellor Schwada at Chicago meeting.

James Isham (center) BJ '42, is newly elected president of Needham, Harper and Steers advertising agency. His wife is a 1942 education graduate. Mark Cox, BJ '37, is the former sports publicity director at the University.

Enjoying coffee at Leaders Meeting are Miss Doris Asselmeier, BS NUR '60, representative of the School of Nursing on the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association; Mrs. Lloyd Turner, BS Ed. '43, whose husband is on alumni board; and Mrs. E. J. Turner, whose husband is chairman of Livingston County alumni committee.

Talking with old friends from the class of '42 are Bert Greenhouse, (left) BS BA '42, and his wife, who live in Kansas, and Allen L. Marlatt, BS Agr. '42, who came the longest distance from Wellton, Ariz.

— Our Alumni Are Active

At the Cole County Alumni barbecue Virginia Henwood Gottlieb, BS Ed. '36, M.Ed. '38, and President Weaver step up to the chow line.

Don Faurot talks with Ralph Hammond, Arts '20, of Jefferson City in his new role as assistant director of alumni activities.

Some of Class of '42 enjoy the coffee given Homecoming weekend in celebration of the women's centennial. Loren Mills Jr., BS BA '42, and his wife, Arts '41, are from Hannibal.

Crosby Kemper Built Small Bank Into Giant Kansas City Institution

Who wants to retire at 74? Not Rufus Crosby Kemper, although he has recently stepped down as chairman of the board of the City National Bank & Trust Co. of Kansas City.

Kemper, who graduated from the University with a bachelor of arts degree in 1914, went to Kansas City after World War I and purchased one-fifth of the stock in what was then known as the City Center Bank. It had only two employees.

Today that bank is ranked 171 in a national rating of more than 14,000 commercial banks in the United States and has capital and reserves in excess of $7 million and deposits at $300 million.

But Kemper is not ready to retire yet. He plans to go to his office daily on the eighth floor of the bank, and he'll remain as honorary board chairman and director, and member of the trust policy and management committees.

Shunning inactivity, Kemper says: "Stay active. One young age of fellows pass on at a fairly young age is that they don't have anything to do. They worry about inactivity. They're under their wives' feet." And there is more activity in Kemper's life than just the bank. He is a member of the board of more than a dozen firms and as many civic and service organizations in Kansas City.

Kemper's career story is an inspiration. He borrowed $25,000 to buy that bank stock after the war and then in 1918 was made president. For 45 years he has been responsible for the bank's steady growth. Now his son, R. Crosby Kemper, Jr., can follow the pattern of leadership. Kemper Jr., who graduated Arts '49 from the University, was named president of the bank in 1959. Like his father, he is extremely active in Kansas City's business, civic and cultural affairs.

As his father says: "I would not be happy if I couldn't stay busy." And it is doubtful the Kemper Sr. will have a lack of activity. Any spare time he plans to utilize overseeing his 550-acre farm.

Another Missouri graduate is the new chairman of the board, Charles G. Young Jr., LL.B. '40, is the former vice chairman of City National Bank & Trust Co. joining the bank in 1959. Young was previously general counsel for the Federal Reserve Bank in St. Louis. At present he is also a director of the Bank of Kirksville (Mo.), Kansas City Press in Lawrence, Kan., and the Missouri State Chamber of Commerce. He is a former trustee of the University of Missouri School Foundation. As chairman of the board, Young will continue as executive head of the trust and bond departments and all administrative services divisions.

'Colorful MU Student' Becomes Champion Rose Grower, Exhibitor

Champion rose grower—a most unusual hobby for a guy who cut a pretty wide swath in college.

Bill Conboy, BS BA '48, wrote the above about John J. Duncan, BS BA '41, who in his words was "one of the University's most colorful students during the immediate pre-war and post-war era."

Duncan, who has three times won the sweepstakes in the Omaha (Neb.) Rose Society shows and won trophies in exhibits throughout the Midwest, began his hobby quite by accident.

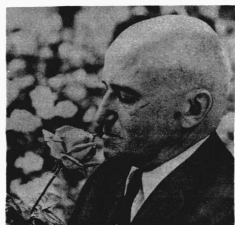

"Approximately 10 years ago, we moved to a home that had a rose garden of 15 bushes. I did my best to keep them alive but knew little about them." Encouraged by neighbors to enter a show, "We were flabbergasted when they phoned and said one exhibit had won 'Queen', or best rose honors, and another was chosen 'King' of the show, or the second best rose."

Quite unknowingly, he had won the two awards that every rosonian hopes to, but some never do in a lifetime. The "Queen of the Show" was a hybrid Tea Rose that had competed against 3200 flowers. The Duncans had called it "Chicago Peace."

Today Duncan is president of the Omaha Rose Society, Inc. He has also served as the Omaha Society's director and vice president and is a member of the American Rose Society, for whom he is a consulting rosonian and an accredited judge.

"That day we first won really got us started. We had to learn something about roses in self defense as so many people were asking us how we did it." Today Duncan owns approximately 150 bushes. His wife and two twin daughters have also taken an enthusiastic interest in his hobby.

It is a wonder that Duncan has time enough to tend his roses. He is vice president and director of the John Day Co., a rubber and supply company in Omaha, and manager of the industrial and contractor departments. He has just completed a two-year term as president of the Iowa-Nebraska Industrial Distributors group, serves on the board of the Central States Industrial Distributors Association and on the board of the Mississippi Valley Association. As if that is not enough, Duncan is also on the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, the American Society of Tool and Maintenance Engineers, the Engineers' Club of Omaha and the Fluid Power Society. And loyal to the University, he is a life member of the Alumni Association and a member of the Columns Club.

But despite all his other activities, Duncan feels very attached to his rose-growing pastime. "We have found rose growing and exhibiting to be a very satisfying hobby and something that we can enjoy as a family."

Bill Raidt Moves Up to Top Spot at D'Arcy

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
(Representative of the New York Times)

Bill Raidt's office at D'Arcy Advertising doesn't have the lived-in look yet. There are several cartoons lying about waiting to be unpacked and several pictures waiting to be hung.

The man himself—49 years old, black wavy hair parted almost in the middle—sits at his desk, quite at home, though and quite at ease with the title of president that he has had since Aug. 8.

"Chicago was a great training ground for getting used to it," he said the other morning, not meaning the unpacked cartoons but rather the responsibility of office. William Thomas Raidt is moving into the agency's biggest office from Chicago, where he was in charge (most recently as executive vice president) since the spring of 1964.

"When I arrived the office was doing $17 million and when I left last month we were doing $27 million. I'm kind of proud of that," he said.

"And you can bet the board of directors noticed—not the pride, the billings.

The agency in the United States, he said, is now billing at the rate of about $110 million and lists (happily) among its clients long-standing Anheuser-Busch and the General Tire & Rubber Co., both on the list since 1915.

"Our corporate philosophy," the president said, lighting up a Salem, "is to increase the share of market for our client companies, and continuing the continuity of their profits."

"Our contention is that there are a lot of agencies not doing this," he added, "We don't believe in building a creative reputation at the expense of our clients."

Although New York is the agency's biggest office, its headquarters is in St. Louis where it was founded in 1906 by William Cheever D'Arcy, a former lead salesman. D'Arcy is a Missouri corporation. And, Mr. Raidt is a native of Missouri.

He was born in St. Joseph and when he was going to Christian Brothers High School he worked for the News Press-Gazette selling classified ads doing a little writing. He never thought of being a newspaper man, though. "I always wanted to be in the advertising business. I knew from the time I was in high school," he recalled.

After high school he went off to Columbia and the University. After Missouri where he picked up a journalism degree in 1940. For a year after that, the man who recalls that "I loved writing" wrote for a Wichita radio station. Then came a call from alma mater to say that D'Arcy was looking for a man.

Lt. Col. ROBERT M. BUSSJAEGER, BJ, has returned from Saigon, where he served a tour of duty in the Command Informant and Military Assistance Command in Vietnam. He is now stationed in Washington, D. "To us Missouri guys, D'Arcy was advertising," Mr. Raidt said, and he's been a D'Arcy man ever since. Well, almost ever since.

There was that World War II interlude when he was a master sergeant on the public relations staff of Gen. Douglas MacArthur and the short time after the war when he did an inter-view show for the N.B.C. radio network.

He came back to D'Arcy in 1947 and was the agency producer for the Spike Jones radio show sponsored by Coca-Cola. After that he went to the Cleveland office where he wrote radio and print ads. Then he went on to the account side and worked for seven years on General Tire & Rubber and more account work in New York from 1956 to 1964 and the Chicago office.

"I've been in administrative work since Cleveland," he said, "been through media, production, the whole works."

And Bill Raidt, who started work on a newspaper where Arthur Brisbane, the famous editor, once worked, and revealed in his association with great reporters in MacArthur's press camp, thinks that more copy writers should approach their jobs as reporters do, with all the facts.

That's a fact.

Busy Barbara Janes Still Has Time for Kids

By LYNN HAWKINS

For one working mom in town, every week's a vacation!

At least that's the way—one day each week—Mrs. Richard Janes (the former Barbara Anne Beckett, AB '52) of Kirkwood solves the old problem of coping with a career, the house cleaning, and youngsters who need attention, all at the same time.

Tuesday through Friday, Barbara Janes directs a national award-winning community and patient relations program for the Jewish Hospital of St. Louis.

What she calls her "fun day with the kids," however, means less exuberant mothers might term a "Blue Monday."

Barbara, a stately strawberry blonde is one of the rare breed who can still stay ahead of a five-year-old with energy and enthusiasm to spare. But like every other day of her life, she needs it for the Monday "vacation," which begins at 6 a.m. with breakfast and getting her husband off to work.

This summer the pattern was as follows. After breakfast, Barbara, then chauffeured her eldest daughter, Sally, 10, to her 7 a.m. swimming lesson.

By the time Sally's swimming lesson was over, the house was cleaned and a picnic lunch was packed and Barbara, Sally, Lisa, 8, and Susan, 5—with half the neighborhood kids—went to look out on a half-day of horseback riding at Babler State Park.

After lunch, Barbara and the girls visited a museum or exhibit or library, then headed for the nearby swimming pool. They left at 3:50 just in time for Barbara to reclaim her hair-do for the working week and to fix supper for Dick before beginning a "relaxing" evening of family softball.

"We really have a marvelous time," Barbara insists, and her three small blonde echos nod in agreement.

Even Barbara admits that "you really have to work hard to make things seem fun and worthwhile. If you don't act enthusiastic about your life, how can you expect anyone else to?"

To get her first job, she took off for Germany and found work as a recreation leader for servicemen. She and Dick were married there.

She admits it was tougher to be enthusiastic about life when she tried playing "Harriet Housewife" full-time.

"I thought it was essential for a baby to have its mother with her 24 hours a day. Besides, with a bachelor's degree in creative writing from the University of Missouri, I was sure I could use all my time to write short stories as I always had wanted to do.

"But you know the routine: Breakfast for your husband, then for the baby, then wash a load of diapers, then straighten the house, then fix lunch and feed the baby, then take a nap, then have coffee with the neighbors, and so on.

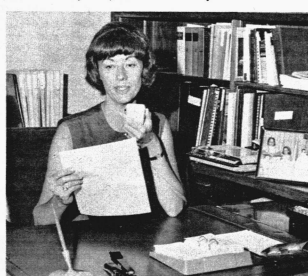

"Oh I tried to write. But if you've ever sat in front of a brick wall and stared for hours . . . you know you have to be around people who are interesting and are experiencing interesting things before you have any thought to write about."

Her resolution to stay home lasted until her second daughter was two years old.

By the time the third child arrived, Barbara had organized a Little theater group and a weekly radio and TV show for a veterans hospital and was working part-time doing fine lace public relations for her husband's firm.

When they moved to St. Louis, she began writing and doing narratives for KTVI-TV and working part-time with her own show on KMOX radio.

One day she decided it would be easier to have one full-time job, so she hired a babysitter and became patient relations director at Jewish Hospital. A program director for a major radio station recently described Barbara Janes as "the funnest to be with of the fun people in town. She always makes you feel that being with you is the most wonderful thing she could be doing at any moment in the world."

Barb herself just feels her attitude is an extension of "small town hospitality."

In Boonville, Mo., where she grew up, "everybody knows everybody else and enjoys everybody else. The adults are maternalistic and paternalistic to everybody's children. They let them know that they are a product of the town and owe it to the town to make something of themselves." The enthusiasm itself she believes is hereditary.

"I'm just like my mother; my daughters are so outgoing, too, that I have to hold them down just like my mother used to do."

This verve is the guiding philosophy around her hospital patient relations program too.

"People who are sick don't understand all the technical equipment and impersonal services necessary to keep the hospital running," she explained.

"But if they feel welcome there; if they feel someone there really cares how they feel and want them to get well, it makes a huge difference."

"It's not the amount of time you spend with either a patient or child that counts," Barbara feels. "It must be a good time—a happening."

She combines home and hospital duties by taking her daughter's Brownie Scout troop to do volunteer projects at the hospital on Saturdays. It helps the hospital and helps the Scouts fill merit badge requirements.

The camaraderie with the children works to the extent that they find it fun to pitch in and help on weekends on projects like washing windows and performing household tasks.

"But Dick and I feel that the important things are exposing the children to as many experiences as possible and, when we are with them, to pay full attention to their needs."

How successful the efforts have been was perhaps summed up best by a six-year-old, freckle-faced neighbor boy who listened while the three little Janes girls chattered about all the places they'd been and what all they'd done this past summer.

Finally he just sighed, "Gee, I wish my mommy worked so she could have time for fun with me like that."

Professor Samuel Brody Inspired Former Graduate in Alien Field

By Daniel McKinley, AB '55, AM '57

On a summer day in 1956, Dr. Samuel Brody collapsed at his office in the Dairy Husbandry department of the University of Missouri. He died of a heart ailment that doctors had assured him ("after all, you are a scientist and your mind has told you are going to die") 10 years before would kill him within six months. Born in Poland in 1890, he came to the United States in 1920. Born into a world where many of the young died young, he lived to be famous in an age where most of the young survived. His sensitive alertness to facts, his dedication to enlarging and integrating into human experience the results of research, led him to write and lecture publicly on the dangers of human over-population long before it was popular to do so. His is a heartening example of a man who used the weight of his authority and the security of his tenure not to fatten upon but to counter the sinister myths of his time.

Ideals, the professor often said, are stupid but without them you would not do anything. Maybe he would have agreed with Cervantes: "Man acting singly may be right-acting in unison he is always wrong." His mature years had been expended among the uncertainties of the scientific knowledge and the physiology of growth. An untiring collector of facts himself, Brody acknowledged at times the value of poetry. In his person, he was a great barrel of a man with no paunch hanging over his belt. In his mind, one saw sometimes the furious purposefulness of a tornado, sometimes a galactic sweep of universal proportions.

He and his wife, Professor Brody died, ventured into a field foreign to me to hear his lectures in "Bioenergetics and Growth," the course that had given its name to an enduring reference work in his field. The book, in its great weight and scientific comprehensiveness, flew in his field. The book, in its great weight lightly in the face of the warning implicit in the quotation from E.J.K. Menge at the head of one of its chapters: "About the year 1857 Thomas Malthus broke down mentally trying to keep abreast of the literature on physiology."

Biochemistry and physiology never became my strong points, but I festered in the breadth of fare offered where the uninitiated would have anticipated a bone-dry graduate course in dairy husbandry. I came away wondering if I could establish a basic metabolic rate for natural communities at their several levels of integration and hoping that I could relate such rates to man's ethics and esthetics and safe production of human biomass. At that I can still conjure up my feelings of excitement of that semester of study. I still recall my image of Brody lecturing to his class and shutting his eyes in thought as he searched out ways to put into words his own incomprehensiveness, few in his field. Organized PR for Jack Ruby Trial

What's it like to organize press relations for a murder trial of international coverage?

Ask Mrs. Bert Holmes, the former Helen Christman, Journ, Arts '47, who was press director of the Jack Ruby trial in Dallas a few years ago.

"During the hearing, I stood at the door and tapped the deputy for every accredited reporter. We didn't have a badge system operating yet and it was all from memory," Mrs. Holmes had required editors to send a telegram delegating one person as their representative. About 370 newsmen and women, of which about 68 were from foreign news organizations, attended. "It was Mrs. Holmes who managed to have the first courtroom assigned which held only 50 persons, changed to a larger one accommodating over 200.

Unable to complete her last semester at the University because of an illness, the former Miss Christman was nevertheless offered a job in Dallas by International News Service. She had served as stringer for them while at the University. After three years in INS, she went to work for Bloom Advertising Agency where she was the first woman to ever work in their public relations department. Shortly thereafter she became director of the department.

Today, although resigned from Bloom, Mrs. Holmes still does some public relations work such as the production of the summer art festival in Dallas. In 1965 she was awarded an outstanding public relations award by Theta Sigma Phi, national fraternity for women in journalism.

Mel Monsees Believes in Making Room for the Young Executive

Why, after 38 years with the Kansas City Corps of Engineers and at the age of 59, would Melford E. Monsees quit to begin a new career as executive manager of the consulting firm of engineering firm of Richard Muther and Associates?

Monsees, who began as a survey party roddan and chairman at $90 a month in 1929, had been known as the "old pro" of the corps' district office. He had been chiefly responsible for developing the modern way of doing things, through an electronic computer center.

As he saw the Municipal Air terminal take shape; he laid out the levees around Fairfax Municipal airport, and then in 1936 he took a desk job. He went through the steps upward by writing magazine articles, special reports and technical papers. He served temporary tours of duty in the office of the Chief of Engineers in Washington, D. C. He had become supervisory civil engineer and then last September he changed jobs.

But Monsees believes that in remaining in the near top positions of a company, you can't see the young men in the echelons below. Leaving the Corps of Engineers naturally caused a much of his time with the corps consulting and helping young engineers to work toward promotions and better jobs for themselves.

At the University, where he received his M.S. in 1963, he is part of the consulting services of the extension division. Now he will have more time to emphasize advising engineering graduates enrolled in extension courses and for lecturing in engineering classes on the Columbia campus.

And Monsees was looking for a new challenge. He thinks he will find that as a new executive manager.

John Listerman Returns to Columbia on G.I. Bill

John C. Listerman was a 1964 zoology graduate at the University. He entered the Marine Corps for two years. In 1965 his patrol was ambushed near Tam Ky and he suffered chest wounds and the loss of his right leg.

Today he has returned to the University to pursue his medical studies. He and his wife and five-month-old son live in Columbia. Listerman is a Purple Heart veteran of the Vietnam war.

But John C. Listerman is just one of 560 returning veterans who is attending the University under the G.I. Bill. There are more than 50,000 in other schools across the country. Because of this increasing number, the University has established a special office to advise on all phases of armed services programs and veteran's benefits.

James R. Johnson, a 1966 graduate of the University with a master's degree in educational administration and presently assistant registrar, is in charge of the new service which includes information on scholarships, commissions, and educational assistance.

Vietnam war veterans receive general coverage under the bill passed last year. Under the new rates that went into effect Oct. 1 for the re-adjustment assistance act, cash benefits paid to fulltime GI students are $130 a month with $25 added for one dependent and $50 for two or more. Part-time students and part-time vocational trainees receive less. Many U. S. money often is not enough. Many veterans take outside jobs.

Howard Headrick: Speech Therapist

He's not a teacher, but he deals with children. He gives them tests, but ability is not the main concern.

Howard Headrick, AM '65, is the speech therapist at Union Grade School in Union, Mo.

The type of work Headrick does daily deals with locating speech and hearing difficulties in grade school children. Besides screening all first graders and testing others recommended to him by teachers, Headrick is involved in training speech and hearing in students.

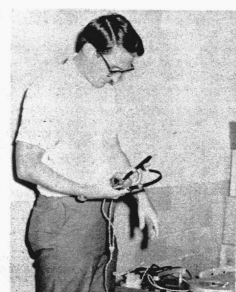

With the use of the echorider, similar to a tape recorder, Headrick is able to point out to children when their voices sound like they are in an accent, a squeak, a hoarseness and problems of stuttering, nasality and stumbling over words.

The Oral Manometer, which is the most interesting, tests the palate and its ability to perform. Headrick says this machine is particularly valuable with nasal voices in which the child is not using velum, which is the soft palate, many times through habit. He can tell to what degree the child is having palate trouble and then set up a training program.

Lack of attention in class may be caused by a hearing problem. "Mild hearing loss can be helped in an auditory training course, which trains the child to use his eyes to help his ear." Headrick also checks teeth alignment, closure of the lips, the size and shape of the tongue and mobility of the lips.

Headrick has brought the first speech therapy clinic to Union grade schools. Previous to his masters in speech pathology, he taught music at the R-7 district school system near Gray Summit, Mo.
