Health-care program offered

Board approves preferred provider organization for University employees.

An innovative health-care program was approved for University employees at the Sept. 10-11 Board of Curators meeting. Under the program, Healthlink Inc. of St. Louis has negotiated discounted rates with a statewide network of hospitals and physicians, known as preferred providers. Those discounts will be available to employees enrolled in the University's medical benefits plan. In Columbia, the preferred providers are the University Hospital and Clinics, and University Physicians, who are members of the Mizzou medical faculty.

The PPO goes into effect Nov. 1. Employee Benefits will mail informational brochures about the program to all employees. Plus, there will be numerous informational meetings for employees.

There is no fee to join the PPO; medical benefit premiums will remain the same. All employees enrolled in the University's medical plan automatically will be eligible to use the PPO, but employees are not required to use the PPO. Certain changes in the medical plan, also effective Nov. 1, were approved by the board as incentives for employees to use the PPO. Only those employees enrolled in the $100 deductible plan will be eligible for the incentives, which are:

- waive the annual $100 deductible

- waive the first day room-and-board deductible
- a 10 percent co-payment for all eligible outpatient medical expenses, rather than the current 20 percent co-payment, with the following exceptions:

- the cost of a second surgical opinion will be covered 100 percent.

- routine outpatient physical exams will be included for all employees and dependents who are 4 years old and over. Each examination will cost the employee $25. There is a limit of one per calendar year for each covered member of your family.

- routine outpatient physical examinations will be included for eligible dependents under the age of 4. Each examination will cost the employee $10 and are limited to three a year per child.

These incentives will apply only when an employee uses a preferred provider.

The following provisions will apply to both $100 and $500 enrollees:

- a utilization review feature places a registered nurse in the hospital as an independent third party to ensure that unnecessary treatment isn't rendered.

- prescription drug benefits will remain the same. But, if Healthlink negotiates discounts with the preferred provider pharmacies, those discounts will be offered at a later date.

Employees in the $500 deductible plan are eligible for the PPO's discounted hospital and physician rates, negotiated by Healthlink. Close to 90 percent of employees in the medical plan are enrolled in the $100 deductible. "Employees in the $500 plan already pay about half of the premiums of those in the $100 deductible. That's why they aren't eligible for the same PPO incentives offered to those in the $100 deductible," says Mary Ann Tipton, manager of UM Employee Benefits.

"In Columbia, the PPO will benefit University Hospital and Clinics as well as employees who choose to utilize its facilities," says Mike Paden, director of UM Employee Benefits.

The new program won't mean additional headaches when it comes to filing claims. After you pay your portion of the bill, the provider will send a claim to Healthlink. Healthlink will certify the negotiated rate, and send the claim on to Provident Life and Accident Insurance Co., the University's medical claims processor, for payment.

The current 10 percent employee discount at the University Hospital will no longer be available. "But the discounts negotiated by Healthlink are even greater," Paden says.

University Hospital and Clinics previously considered offering a health maintenance organization, in which members pay a fee for comprehensive health care. HMOs, which are offered on the St. Louis and Kansas City campuses, are more costly than the University's medical premiums. For example, in Kansas City single employees pay $30.80 a month to join one HMO, compared with $25.76 a month for single employees in the $100 deductible. In St. Louis, a family pays $99.96 a month to belong to one HMO, compared with $66.14 for families in the $100 deductible.

"In an HMO, you must use a member provider," Tipton says. "A PPO allows you to use the discounted services offered by the preferred providers or to go to any other hospital or doctor and use your basic medical benefits program." Tipton says another benefit of the PPO is that the University will belong to a statewide health-care network. "If you are enrolled in the University's medical plan, you can go to any of the preferred providers in the state and receive significantly discounted rates."

Jeff Chinn, Mizzou's vice provost for instruction, will teach a political science class next semester. Chinn wants to stay in touch with students to better address their concerns.

Vice provost urges students to explore life

Learning doesn't stop at the classroom door. Semesters abroad and arts courses paint a colorful education.

Vice Provost for Instruction is a serious, get-to-work title that conjures up images of the classroom and students with heads burrowed in their books. But, the man with the title sees the classroom as only one part of a student's college years.

"College is one time in a student's life when he or she has a chance to explore different things," says Jeff Chinn, who stepped into the new office July 15. "A student is in a position to enrich his or her life. A lot of students go through school looking toward a career. I tell them they should take that extra semester to do a little personal enrichment — learn another language, take an art course. They'll be working the rest of their lives."

That energetic attitude should help Chinn to forge a friendly personality for the new vice provost position, part of the reorganization of the Provost's Office. He won't be a stranger to students. Chinn, who taught political science courses at Illinois State University and at the University of Minnesota, plans to teach a winter semester political science course about comparative politics. "It's important to have contact with students in a normal sort of way," he says. "Teaching gives me a chance to get on campus and to see students' problems."

That classroom experience will help Chinn in his new job. The vice provost post was created to direct attention to improvement in the undergraduate curriculum. Goals include improving the freshman experience, enhancing the liberal arts curriculum, encouraging minority participation in higher education as well as developing innovative international programs.

Chinn has experience in all those areas. As assistant vice provost and dean of undergraduate studies at Illinois State University in Normal, Chinn was responsible for the undergraduate curriculum and the coordination and development of minority services.

At Mizzou, Chinn hopes to increase the visibility of international studies, emphasizing the importance of a worldwide outlook. Chinn's international interest is reflected in his work. He is a Fulbright scholar and author of a book and several articles about the Soviet Union.

Creating an effective retention program and improving undergraduate education also are high on his list of priorities. He'll work with Provost Lois DeFleur, deans, directors and service providers to develop productive programs in those areas.

A good education would be one where "every student at some point in his or her career does something special," Chinn says, "whether that's working on a research project with a professor, doing an internship or going abroad. This University isn't so large that we can't provide personalized opportunities for students."

FOLKLORE EXPERTS TO BE HONORED

A graduate of the University and a longtime Mizzou staff member will be honored at a reception to be held at 5 p.m. Sept. 24 in 23 Ellis Library. Hosts are the Western Historical Manuscript Collection and the Missouri Folklore Society.

Loman D. Cansler, BS Ed '49, MA '50, will receive the Missouri Folklore Society Distinguished Achievement Award for his work in collecting and recording Missouri's traditional balladry, folk songs and folklore.

Sterling Kelley of Columbia, who was a carpenter at Mizzou from 1947 to 1971, will be awarded an honorary membership in the Missouri Folklore Society in appreciation of his contributions to folklore programs and for his contribution to knowledge relating to Missouri folk life. Kelley recorded an album of traditional Missouri music and has played leaf and bones at the National Folk Festival.

RUSK MARKS 25TH YEAR

Exhibits, tours and displays will be part of the 25th anniversary celebration Sept. 26 at Rusk Rehabilitation Center.

A continental breakfast at 10 a.m. will be followed by a football game at 11 a.m. where local media personalities will face-off against wheelchair athletes.

Activities will continue throughout the day. For more information call 882-1081.

PIGSKIN PRESCHOOL IS IN SESSION

Just because your baby sitter's tied up doesn't mean you can't be a Tiger booster. The Child Development Lab's 1987 Pigskin Preschool can solve your problem.

The preschool in 31 Stanley Hall offers baby-sitting from noon until after the game for children ages 6 weeks to 10 years. The cost is $8 a child per game.

To enroll your child, call Jackie Clark, Pigskin Preschool coordinator, or Linda Phifer, secretary, at 882-4035. Space is limited, so call soon.

Stucky to direct economic office

Vice Chancellor Duane Stucky will move to a systemwide post in November. As executive director for Economic Development and associate vice president, Stucky will coordinate the University's growing array of economic development activities, including the University's research parks in Kansas City and St. Louis, and ensure those projects are serving the state.

"This is a tough, challenging and extraordinarily significant assignment -- one uniquely suited to Dr. Stucky's experiences, talents and creativity as an engineer and administrator," says UM President C. Peter Magrath.

Stucky will earn $84,000 a year in his new position.

Stucky came to the Columbia campus in 1979 as director of Institutional Research and Planning. In 1983, he moved into his current position as vice chancellor for Administrative Services. He served as interim chancellor from January 1987 until Haskell Monroe arrived in July 1987. Prior to coming to Mizzou, Stucky held administrative posts at the University of Oklahoma and The Ohio State University. Before entering higher education, Stucky was a mechanical engineer.

Q&A

Q. Ever since classes started there has been a parking problem at RC18 at the Heinkel Building. When you pull out of your spot at lunchtime, a student is ready to pull into it.

A. "You're doing the right thing by calling the police department because it handles parking lot enforcement," says Jim Joy, director of Parking and Transportation Services. According to Joy, enforcement is easier after the hysteria of the first weeks of school passes. "You should start seeing more cars being towed."

Q. I pay $10.50 a month and it gripes me not to be able to have a parking spot when I come back from lunch or a meeting. All the police do is ticket the cars and let them sit on the lot. Why can't illegally parked cars be towed so that employees who work in the Heinkel Building have a parking spot? Why do we daily have to call University Police to have cars ticketed?

A. "There were fewer cars parked there last year so violators didn't stick out as much," Joy says.

Q. Who was responsible for the parking problem at the Mizzou vs. Baylor football game? There were several rows of cars with no lanes in between, creating a major traffic jam after the game. Also, any emergency vehicles were there for the duration of the game as it would have been impossible for them to get out of the lot.

A. "Unless we have a complaint, however, we only will ticket vehicles." Cars on the "tow list," those with three or more unpaid violations, are automatically towed.

Q. When we asked a University Police cadet how anyone was supposed to get out of the lot, the reply was, "We don't know. We were just told to park people this way."

A. "We expected some heavy traffic leaving the lot, but 45 minutes sitting in traffic was ridiculous. Give the fans a break next home game — park cars in two lanes with an aisle and people will leave with smiles on their faces."

A. According to Jack Watring, associate director of University Police, there was a problem with parking in Lot D by the Dutton Brookfield facility. "The cadets told me they didn't park the cars properly in that lot," he says.

"We always park cars bumper-to-bumper, leaving no lanes in between except one for emergency vehicles," he says. At this game, the police tried to leave lanes in between the cars, but ran out of space.

The parking situation around the stadium always is tight. Fans who park in the surrounding lots will have to wait in the bumper-to-bumper formations as the cars around them file out. Watring encourages fans, when possible, to park their cars a distance from the stadium and walk to the game.

Parking Q & A

Q: How many employees actually requested stickers instead of hangtags this year?

A: Although we have not kept track of actual numbers, as we looked through the renewal forms approximately 1 in every 25 requested a sticker. Since that time however, quite a few of those persons have come to our office and asked to have a hangtag, since the size of the hantag is more convenient this year.

HONORARY COACHES TAKE FIELD

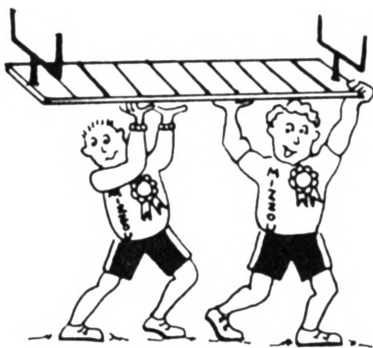

Ed Kaiser, director of the Honors College, will be on the Tiger sidelines as honorary football coach when the team takes on Syracuse Oct. 3.

Kaiser is one of seven honorary coaches chosen for the season. Others are: Roger Mitchell, dean of agriculture, Baylor; Jo Behymer, assistant dean of education, Northwestern; Walter C. Daniel, director of the General Studies Program, Kansas State; Norman Moore, vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services, Oklahoma State; Chancellor Haskell Monroe, Nebraska; and Gary Freie, director of Registration, Kansas.

The coaches are invited to attend practices, participate in Saturday morning activities, eat the pregame meal with the team, go to the locker room and sit on the bench during the game. They also receive a plaque and give a speech at the quarterback luncheon.

While all honorary football coaches have been chosen, there's still time to send in nominations for honorary basketball coaches. Send nominations to Jack Lengyel, director of Intercollegiate Athletics, 341 Hearn Center.

BOARD SCHEDULES PUBLIC HEARINGS ON DIVESTMENT

The Board of Curators plans to give people the opportunity to speak out on the University's investment policy in South Africa at a public hearing Oct. 13.

Sessions are scheduled from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. in Memorial Union Auditorium.

Those who wish to speak during the hearing should make written requests to Catherine Hunt, secretary to the board, 316 University Hall, by Oct. 1. Each speaker must limit remarks to five minutes.

UNITED WAY DRIVE KICK OFF SET

Nationally, United Way will enter its "Second Century of Caring" in 1987. The campus' annual campaign will kick off at 7:30 a.m. Sept. 30 in N222-223 Memorial Union. Mizzou's goal is $171,161.

Packets containing contribution cards, a United Way brochure and report forms will be distributed to United Way regional, district and unit chairs at the kick off.

The campaign will run through Oct. 30.

Proposals center on dismissals

Faculty Council recommended changes to tenure regulations regarding faculty dismissal at the Sept. 17 meeting. The proposed changes might be presented to the Board of Curators in October. Peter Davis, professor of law and chair of the academic freedom and grievance committee, presented a report that suggests three major changes.

Under the proposed regulations, faculty who were dismissed on the grounds of mental disorder would be considered to have a medical disability and would be subject to those regulations. Severance benefits would not apply under those circumstances.

Another recommendation addresses notification of faculty who are dismissed. Currently, faculty who are dismissed have one year's notice after the completion of appeals prior to severance of pay. "There is no fair formula for all circumstances," Davis said. The council recommends that period be shortened to six months with the option to shorten or lengthen severance based on each individual case.

The final change relates to sexual harassment and discrimination. Original wording indicated a faculty member would have to be guilty of "repeated" harassment to be dismissed. An official warning and opportunity for correction of behavior were necessary before dismissal. Proposed changes would allow immediate dismissal based on one incident of "grave" sexual harassment or discrimination.

In other council action, Al Hahn, professor of veterinary medicine and surgery and chair of the academic and faculty affairs committee, proposed the formation of a task force to study unification of general education requirements across divisions. Hahn says all but three schools and colleges on campus grant a bachelor's degree, but there is little consistency. His committee suggests tighter guidelines for general education requirements.

The vice provost for instruction, Jeff Chinn, who attended the meeting, said he supports the formation of a task force to study possible campuswide general education requirements. Chinn says he would like to see the task force act before the publication of the 1989 spring course catalog.

John Bauman, professor of chemistry and Faculty Council chair, made a statement in support of Mizzou staff. "Faculty council voices support for our dedicated staff. We are united with them in a joint effort to deliver a high quality, university education for the state of Missouri." The council unanimously endorsed Bauman's statement.

Zwonitzer takes job in athletics

The Intercollegiate Athletics Department has a new director of business affairs. Gary L. Zwonitzer, associate director of Business Services at Mizzou, started his new job Sept. 21.

His hiring marks the completion of the reorganization of the department's administrative structure, says Jack Lengyel, director of Intercollegiate Athletics. Lengyel says 20 years of experience with Mizzou will make Zwonitzer an excellent addition to athletic administration. "Zwonitzer is well respected on this campus and gives us another opportunity to integrate our department with the mission of the University."

During his tenure at Mizzou, Zwonitzer has gained experience in budget, fiscal and personnel matters. He also coordinated the campus travel management program, helped implement the new faculty and staff identification card system and a point-of-service terminal system for the Cashier's Office.

Unit serves varied needs

Psychological Clinic helps cut problems down to size with affordable, private, quality counseling.

If you're depressed, having trouble on your job, can't control your children or can't get along with your spouse, you may benefit from a call to the Psychological Clinic, says Nan Presser, adjunct associate professor of psychology and new clinic director.

The clinic, a service offered by the Psychology Department, is a resource many people aren't aware of, Presser says. "When I started as director in July, I wanted to meet the people who'd be making referrals to the clinic. I found that many people didn't know the clinic existed or the services it offered."

A wide range of services is available at the clinic, including individual, family and marriage counseling. Most clinics in the area are staffed by psychologists who are trained only to the master's level, Presser says. "Our clinic is unique because it is staffed by advanced doctoral students under the close supervision of faculty, many of whom are nationally known in their areas."

Because many of the faculty are licensed psychologists, Mizzou employees who use the services can claim psychological outpatient insurance benefits. Faculty and staff enrolled in Mizzou's medical insurance plan can be reimbursed for 50 percent of the first $60 per visit for treatment prescribed by one of the clinic's licensed psychologists. That means the plan would pay up to $30 a visit. The insurance covers psychological outpatient benefits up to $2,000 a year. Employees must meet the deductible required by their plan before receiving benefits. The coverage does not include treatment by doctoral students, unless supervised by a licensed psychologist.

The clinic calculates charges on a sliding scale based on income. But Presser says the reason many people hesitate to seek help is not financial. "It's hard for some people to admit there are areas of their lives they can't handle independently. There used to be a stigma attached to psychological counseling, but that way of thinking is really out of date," she says. "It makes sense to visit a doctor when you are ill. That's a wise way to use available resources. We are a resource, too."

Presser says many people wait until a problem gets out of hand before coming to the clinic. "Many couples don't come for counseling until there's so much anger and animosity in the marriage that there's not much left to rebuild on." It is difficult to make the first step, Presser says. But the key to defeating a problem is to seek help early.

The clinic serves both the campus and community. You don't need a referral to use the clinic. "I personally meet with all new clients and determine which therapist to assign to the case," Presser says. "We offer a good service and I want the people of Columbia and the University to take advantage of it."

The Psychological Clinic is located at 100 McAlester Hall. Call 882-4677 or 882-4583 to set up an appointment. Hours are from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Evening appointments can be scheduled on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

As a volunteer, Matthew Tyler is a role model for youngsters.

Volunteering time, talent

A relaxed attitude and a flair for time management help this staff member keep a busy life in line.

As executive staff assistant to Vice Chancellor Norman Moore, Matthew Tyler helps coordinate the 12 departments within Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services and develop programs for the 545 employees within the division. With all that to keep track of, you'd think Tyler would gratefully retire to his home each evening. But, when he walks out his office door, he doesn't stop working.

His after-hours responsibilities include an impressive list of volunteer work. In addition to being pastor at the Friendship Baptist Church in Columbia, he is a member of Mizzou's Minority Mentor program, on the board of the Food Bank, chair of the Blind Boone Center Advisory Board, on the executive board of the Columbia chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, president of Mizzou's Black Faculty and Staff Organization, a member of the minority men network, a volunteer for the state's Department of Corrections, a member of the Minister's Union, executive secretary of the Mount Carmel District Association and regional director of the mid-Missouri area Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

"I don't watch much television," Tyler says with a laugh. He credits youthful energy and skill at balancing a busy calendar for helping him honor all his commitments. "People really don't realize how much time they do have," he adds.

Tyler says he's willing to volunteer his time because there is so much work to be done. "It helps the way people look at the University," he says. "I can be a role model for the youngsters I work with; they can see that having an education doesn't separate you from your community."

Tyler has a master's degree in psychology and bachelor's degrees in psychology and math from the University of Southwestern Louisiana. He earned an educational specialist degree from Mizzou in 1982 and is working on a doctorate in higher and adult education.

As executive staff assistant, Tyler consults with directors of the 12 areas in Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services; plans staff development projects; and serves as a resource for students, "along with anything else that comes up," he says. Prior to joining Moore's office July 1, he was a management analyst with the vice chancellor for Administrative Services.

An easy-going attitude helps Tyler get through his packed days. "You plan your time and your meetings and you don't let anything bother you," he says. A plaque on his desk is a clue to why his work never ends. It reads, "We create our tomorrows by what we dream today." If Tyler's busy lifestyle is any indication of his tomorrow, he is working toward something big.

SUSAN H. ALLEN, a postdoctoral fellow in medicine, was selected to be one of the 40 participants at the Summer Institute on Aging in Baltimore. The institute, held in July, was sponsored by the Department of Health and Human Services National Institute on Aging and American Geriatrics Society.

J. ALAN ALLERT, instructor in veterinary biomedical science, attended the Shock Society meeting in Montreal June 7 through 12.

SANDRA ALPER, associate professor of special education, cowrote a data-bases article called "Extended School Year Services for Students with Severe Handicaps: A National Survey." The article was published in the spring 1987 issue of The Journal of the Association for Persons with Severe Handicaps. Alper also served on a panel in July to review grant applications in the area of the severely handicapped for the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education and Rehabilitation Services.

CHARLOTTE M. BALCER, a second-year resident, has been selected from 5,000 nominees as one of six psychiatry residents across the country to become a 1987-88

Rappeport Fellow of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law.

JAMES T. BARRETT, professor of microbiology, presented seminars earlier this year on "Advances in T-cell Immunology" at the Universidad de Sevilla and Universidad de Bilbao in Spain.

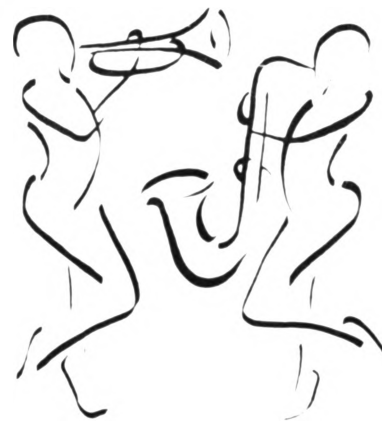

LLOYD H. BARROW, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, wrote an article titled "Professional Preparation and Responsibility of New England Pre-service Elementary Science Methods Faculty" for the July 1987 issue of Science Education. Barrow presented a paper, "Magnet Concepts and Elementary Students' Misconceptions," at the International Misconceptions Conference in Math and Science, which was held July 26 through 29 in Ithica, N.Y. Barrow and STUART PALONSKY, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, presented a paper, "A Case Study of K-3 Science Workshop," at the National Association for Research Science Teaching Convention in Washington, D.C.

RALPH C. BEDELL, professor emeritus of educational and counseling psychology and of higher and adult education and foundations, wrote the forward to a book, "Merit in Education," by Hans Andrews, EdD '71. The book discusses merit pay and rewards as the catalyst to pay-and-evaluation reforms in education.
