The rectilinear representation of a year: 2006

This is a 2006 calendar divided into four different parts that measure roughly 29" x 45". Each individual poster represents a three month period or rough season. The days of the month are set up in a grid pattern of eight wide and each month is represented by a hue of color of that particular season. There are no days of the week present, only numbers with sundays in yellow. My goal was to take the functionality of a calendar and strip it down to it's basic parts while also showing the relationship of days to months in an aesthetically pleasing and modernized/minimilistic way.
