Constitutional Amendments, Statutory Revision and Referenda Submitted to the Voters by the General Assembly or by Initiative Petition, 1910–2008¹

David C. Valentine

December 2008

This report summarizes how proposals to revise the Missouri Constitution and Missouri laws are submitted to the voters for approval and provides information about all measures submitted to the voters since 1910.

In 1908, Missouri adopted the initiative and referendum, reforms advanced by Progressives of the early 20th century. Today, it is one of 18 states that authorize voters to propose and vote upon amendments to the state constitution. Missouri is one of 24 states that permit voters to propose changes to state statutes and to disapprove of an act of the legislature by a referendum.² Provisions relating to the initiative and referendum are contained in Article XII, Section 2(b) and Article III, Sections 49–53 of the Missouri Constitution and in Chapter 116, Revised Statutes of Missouri (RSMo). Of course, the General Assembly retains the Initiative — A Constitutional Amendment or a change in law proposed by citizens.

Referendum — A citizen-initiated vote on legislation approved by the Legislature.

power to propose constitutional amendments and the power to submit statutory changes to the voters for final approval. Table 1 summarizes the way that proposals for constitutional and statutory change may be submitted to the voters.

Missouri Constitutional Amendments

Proposed initiatives for a constitutional amendment must be approved by eight percent of the voters in two-thirds of the state's nine congressional districts in order to be placed on the ballot. A constitutional initiative must be submitted to the Secretary of State at least six months before the election and, if approved by the voters, becomes effective 30 days after the election. Constitutional amendments may also be proposed by the General Assembly. Such proposals are considered in the same manner as bills containing statutory change, although that practice is by custom, rather than constitutionally required. Again by custom, proposals for constitutional amendment are called joint resolutions (Senate Joint Resolution or House Joint Resolution, depending upon the point of origin).

Please refer to Table A-1 in the appendix for a description of all constitutional amendments proposed since 1910, including method used to propose them, and the vote on each proposed amendment.

⁴ The percentage is calculated from the number voting for governor in the last election.

Four-fifths of all proposed constitutional amendments were submitted to the voters by the General Assembly (Table 2) and proposals submitted by the General Assembly are more likely to be approved by the voters than are proposals submitted through initiative petition.

Note also that constitutional initiatives were more common before the adoption of the 1945 constitution than after adoption (Table 3). In fact, 63% of all constitutional initiatives were proposed in the 34 years before the adoption of the constitution and only 12% were proposed in the 34 years following the adoption of the 1945 constitution. Comparing all constitutional amendments for the entire period since 1910, 46% of the amendments were proposed in the 34 years before the adoption of the 1945 constitution and 54% were proposed in the 60 years following the adoption.

Statutory revision

Statutory revision may be proposed by the General Assembly or by the voters. When proposed by the General Assembly, the proposal does not go to the governor for his signature but is presented directly to the Secretary of State for subsequent submission to the voters for their approval or rejection (see Article III, Section 52(b), Missouri Constitution). An act approved by the legislature does not take effect until it has been approved by the voters. The statutory initiative takes effect upon approval by the voters, rather than 30 days after approval, as set for constitutional amendments.

Citizens may initiate a vote on a statutory revision, upon the submission of the signatures of five percent of the voters gathered from each of six congressional districts. (See chapter 116, RSMo for additional requirements). It should be noted that the General Assembly may amend any statutory initiative approved by the voters, just as it can any other statute, without submitting the revision to the voters for their approval. A statutory initiative cannot be used to appropriate moneys, other than any money that might be raised by the initiative. As a practical matter, budget cycles generally preclude such appropriations even in cases where new revenue is generated but the statutory initiative may indicate where such moneys should be directed, once appropriated.

Statutory proposals submitted to the voters by the General Assembly and by initiative presented in Table A-2. Statutory revision tends to involve more controversial matters, whether initiated by the voters or by the General Assembly. The Legislature tends to submit important issues to the voters when public opinion is unsettled. An issue that is important enough to stimulate an initiative petition drive is always important to an intense minority, but perhaps not to the voters at large. There have only been 51 statutory revision proposals submitted to the voters since 1910. Except for 1922, the General Assembly has used the statutory initiative sparingly. In fact, excluding 1922, the General Assembly has submitted only 12 of 35 statutory initiatives to the voters. Overall, voters have approved only 15 (29%) statutory initiatives, slightly more than one proposal per decade.

Referenda

Citizens may call a referendum on a measure approved by the General Assembly and not vetoed by the Governor. The petition must be signed by five percent of the voters from two-thirds (currently 6) of the state’s congressional districts and it must be submitted to the Secretary of State within 90 days of adjournment of the session in which the measure is adopted.⁶ A proposed referendum may not address “laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety.”⁷ In addition, referenda cannot address current appropriations (Article III, Section 52(a)).

Bills typically become effective 90 days after the end of each legislative session (that is, August 28) and signed referendum petitions must be submitted by that date. This time limitation has the practical effect of limiting the use of the referendum to those bills that arouse widespread, strong opposition. It also means that if the opponents get sufficient signatures, they have an excellent chance to defeat the bill. Table A-3 presents the results of the 26 referenda that have been called since 1914. Fully 24 of those proposals have been rejected by the votes; that is, the voters disapproved the bill enacted by the General Assembly. The voters approved the action of the General Assembly only two times in almost 100 years and both occurred in the 1920s.

⁵ The constitution provides that “any measure proposed shall take effect when approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon” and the Missouri Supreme Court determined that “approval” was the date the proposal was voted upon, not the day that the election is certified by the secretary of State. See State ex rel. Elsas v. Missouri Workmen’s Compensation Commission 2 S.W. 2d (Mo banc 1928).

⁶ May 30th, annually (Article III, Section 20(a)).

⁷ This language is identical to that required of the General Assembly to declare an act an emergency act with an early effective date.

The referenda was widely used from 1914 to 1922 but has been used only six times in the last 80 plus years, and was last used in 1982.

Conclusion

All constitutional amendments must be submitted to the voters and voters have been receptive to proposals for constitutional change, especially proposals submitted by the General Assembly. Statutory revision is another matter, whether submitted by the General Assembly or the voters through an initiative. We can understand how proposals submitted by the General Assembly would not fare well simply because the General Assembly tends to send controversial proposals to the voters. There is a similar explanation for the poor showing of proposals submitted by initiative petition. In most cases, these address issues that the General Assembly has been unable or to resolve and are usually controversial. Supporters of these proposals tend to hold intense views, but these are typically not widely shared views. The referendum is just the opposite. While the 90 day timeline for submission of signatures poses a significant barrier, opponents can be successful when there is widespread, intense opposition.

* Missouri Manual, 1951-1952, reports a vote on a constitutional amendment that would have increased the gas tax by four cents (p. 1016), April 4, 1950. There was no constitutional amendment on this issue proposed by the General Assembly or the voters in 1949 or 1950. There was, however, a referendum on a four cent gas tax authorized in HB185 (1949). This act was submitted to the voters by referendum (See Heinkel v. Toberman 226 SW2d 1012). The vote recorded in the Missouri Manual, then, was a vote on the HB 185 referendum. Thanks to Anne Rottmann for sorting out this puzzle.

*By operation of the constitution, voters were asked if a constitutional convention should be called to revise the constitution. See Article XII, section 3(a).
