The wind is blowing in some exciting changes here at the TMR Podcast! We’re not ready to reveal everything just yet, but while you wait in breathless anticipation, please enjoy this wonderful interview with Heather Christie. One of our talented former interns, Delia Rainey, chatted with Heather over the summer, discussing her collection of poems, What is Amazing, her work with jubilat, and, quite appropriately, her telephone project, which celebrated the release of Heather’s 2011 collection, The Trees The Trees.

Heather Christie is the author of What Is Amazing (Wesleyan University Press, 2012), The Difficult Farm (Octopus Books, 2009), and The Trees The Trees (Octopus Books, 2011), which won the 2012 Believer Poetry Award. Her poems have appeared in publications including Boston Review, Gulf Coast, The New Yorker, and The Best American Poetry. She has taught poetry at Antioch College, Sarah Lawrence College, the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Emory University, where she was the 2009-2011 Poetry Writing Fellow. She is the Web Editor for jubilat and frequently a writer in residence at the Juniper Summer Writing Institute. A native of Wolfeboro, New Hampshire, she lives in Yellow Springs, Ohio.
