This week on The Missouri Review Soundbooth Missouri Review Editor, Speer Morgan, and Marketing Director, Kris Somerville, discuss their "literary dig" at the British Museum where they found a bundle of letters written by Laurence Olivier to young aspiring actors. The letters were later published in 2007 as part of the Review's Found Text Features.

Next week on the Soundbooth, we'll be launching First Books Month, a series of podcasts during the month of June that introduces listeners to writers whose first books have recently been published.

The Missouri Review Soundbooth is a new weekly podcast series that brings you readings and interviews with authors, editors and agents about what's happening in the literary world.
