Fluoride opponents air concerns at forum

By Anne Calder

The Wichita Eagle

Wichita’s anti-fluoride activists are getting ready to launch a $5,000 online ad campaign to educate their constituents about the potential drawbacks of fluoridation.

A former mayor of Wichita and a former city councilman have joined the group, called Wichitaans for Non-Fluoridated Water, to lead the effort.

The group is planning to work with partners to distribute information about the dangers of fluoride, and they hope to see a decrease in the number of people who support fluoridation in the future.

The group has already launched an online petition to encourage the city to remove fluoride from the drinking water, and they plan to continue their efforts until they achieve their goal.

Fluoridation opponents plan to advertise online

Sara Holder, a member of the group, said they have been planning this campaign for several months and are excited to see it come to fruition.

“It’s important to have a strong voice in the debate,” Holder said. “We need to make sure the public understands the risks associated with fluoride.”

The group is planning to work with partners to distribute information about the dangers of fluoride, and they hope to see a decrease in the number of people who support fluoridation in the future.

The group has already launched an online petition to encourage the city to remove fluoride from the drinking water, and they plan to continue their efforts until they achieve their goal.

The group is planning to work with partners to distribute information about the dangers of fluoride, and they hope to see a decrease in the number of people who support fluoridation in the future.