In our most recent (Winter 2014 Issue) Josh Huber and Johanna Saleska spoke on the phone with writer Mary Roach. Today on the podcast, we have a selection from their wide-ranging interview, including some new content that didn’t make it to the print interview. We hope you enjoy!

Josh Huber is a second-year master’s degree student in creative writing at the University of Missouri-Columbia. He teaches freshman composition at MU, is working on his first book-length manuscript of poetry and is writing a thesis about E. E. Cummings’s adventures in the early 1930’s. He lives in Columbia, Missouri.
Johanna Saleska is a graduate student in rhetoric and composition at the University of Missouri-Columbia and a former intern at The Missouri Review. In addition to teaching first-year writing at MU, Johanna is researching how college students write for and about the community through service-learning and community outreach programs on university campuses.

And don’t forget about our 2015 Miller Audio Prize Contest, with categories in Poetry, Prose, Audio Documentary, and–new this year–Humor!
