MISSOURI ALUMNI IN JOURNALISM

Graduates and former students

The Journalist's Creed

I believe in the profession of journalism.

I believe that the public journal is a public trust; that all connected with it are, to the full measure of their responsibility, trustees for the public; that acceptance of lesser service than the public service is betrayal of this trust.

I believe that clear thinking and clear statement, accuracy and fairness, are fundamental to good journalism.

I believe that a journalist should write only what he holds in his heart to be true.

I believe that suppression of the news, for any consideration other than the welfare of society, is indefensible.

I believe that no one should write as a journalist what he would not say as a gentleman; that bribery by one's own pocketbook is as much to be avoided as bribery by the pocketbook of another; that individual responsibility may not be escaped by pleading another's instructions or another's dividends.

I believe that advertising, news and editorial columns should alike serve the best interests of readers; that a single standard of helpful truth and cleanness should prevail for all; that the supreme test of good journalism is the measure of its public service.

I believe that the journalism which succeeds best—and best deserves success—fears God and honors man; is stoutly independent, unmoved by pride of opinion or greed of power, constructive, tolerant but never careless, self-controlled, patient, always respectful of its readers but always unafraid; is quickly indignant at injustice; is unswayed by the appeal of privilege or the clamor of the mob; seeks to give every man a chance and, as far as law and honest wage and recognition of human brotherhood can make it so, an equal chance; is profoundly patriotic while sincerely promoting international good will and cementing world-comradeship; is a journalism of humanity, of and for today's world.

An Outsider's View

I have traveled far and observed journalism in many climes. I have yet to find anywhere the professional code of true and honorable journalists better stated than in the credo of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri. Were that the creed of every newspaper office the ban of popular displeasure which has rested upon the press in America would never have become of any importance whatever. If this, the oldest and sturdiest of our schools of journalism, whose tenth anniversary we are so gratefully celebrating today, had done nothing else than impress this upon the students who have passed through its gates, we should surely still be standing here to acclaim this pioneer in its field and to congratulate it upon a maturity which has dispelled all doubts as to its permanency. By its fruits it is known, and when its head declares that he is proud of the "courage, conscience and high ideals" its graduates "are putting into practice" he tells us the one thing above all others which we wish to hear.—Oswald Garrison Villard in Commencement Address at the University of Missouri, 1918.

The School of Journalism

As the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri begins its thirteenth year, it is represented by 238 graduates and more than 1500 former students. Ninety per cent of the graduates and many of the former students are engaged in some form of newspaper, magazine or advertising work.

At the School of Journalism, the alumni have left behind them an institution that they themselves helped to build up—the Columbia Evening Missourian, the daily newspaper which serves as a laboratory for the students in the school. This newspaper was taken over by the students and kept going by them at a time when the outlook for it was not bright. Starting under the name of University Missourian, devoted largely to news of the campus, it became through their efforts the Evening Missourian, devoted to news of Columbia and vicinity, including the University, of course.

The paper's most recent transition, from the four-page, six-column Evening Missourian to the six or eight-page eight-column Columbia Evening Missourian, was made possible largely by the generosity of an alumnus. Ward A. Neff, '13, was the donor of a new building on the site of the old Laws Observatory which made it possible for the school to install its own printing plant, from which the new paper is issued.

For eleven years the board of directors responsible for the paper consisted each year of students then in school. Beginning this year, the board consists of alumni, under a slightly different form of incorporation.

All this, of course, means that the school is vitally interested in the alumni and former students, and the latter in the school and each other. Scattered as the School of Journalism's product is, over numerous states and countries, and in other continents, it is easy for them to become "lost" to their old campus friends. This booklet will have achieved its purpose if it affords a point of contact, a meeting place, for those who once wrote copy for the Missourian.

Future editions of this will be issued yearly. Those whose names appear herein can help to keep the information up to date by sending in additions or corrections. Address the Editor, Alumni Yearbook, School of Journalism, University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo.

Graduates of the School

More than 1500 students have received instruction in the School of Journalism. This includes both those students in other university divisions who took one or more courses in journalism, and those students who were enrolled primarily in journalism. The latter class includes numerous special students, who were not candidates for degrees, so that the list of those who were primarily in journalism is longer than the list of graduates.
