Jerry Freidheim briefs the press on "Project Homecoming," the return program for POW's.

By Laura Longley Babb, BJ '68, AM '70

On first impression, Jerry Friedheim seems all wrong for the Pentagon. A rather unassuming, soft-spoken Missourian with an office at the end of a long corridor lined with the likenesses of Commander-in-Chief Richard Nixon and General Douglas MacArthur, Friedheim would strike most as a lightweight amidst all the heavy brass. Chalk up one mistaken impression.

As Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense (Public Affairs)—a position with the equivalent rank of a three-star general—Friedheim is best known as the "Pentagon Spokesman." But it's no cushy post. Highly regarded by the Nixon Administration, he was recently awarded the Defense Department Medal for Distinguished Public Service for providing "clear, concise, accurate and timely information concerning the worldwide activities of the Department of Defense." However, he also gets his share of flack from the press who attend his briefings. For example, in December, his denial that U.S. pilots had deliberately bombed civilian targets in Hanoi prompted one New York columnist to write: "Perhaps no man in history has ever lied for his government as doggedly, as witlessly or as unsuccessfully as Jerry Friedheim."

In this instance and others, the mild-mannered spokesman has acknowledged that some of his statements have been proven untrue by later information, but he rejects the accusation that he has ever told outright lies. "I would never knowingly lie," says Friedheim. But, "I never tell you everything I know either, because I have another job, which is to protect classified information."

Yet Friedheim defends the press's right to criticize. "Look down the corridor. You'll notice that we're the only building in town with the Freedom of Information Act on the wall. There are a lot of Missouri people here, and we believe in a strong free country with a strong free press. In fact, the jobs in the defense department are about the only place where these two ideas co-exist." The 38-year-old native of Joplin received his BJ from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 1956 and later returned for his master's degree.

With the Vietnam war technically over, Friedheim believes there will be some changes in his responsibilities. "We have to do an even better job of explaining what the military services are doing. We must help the American people understand that if we want the detente we must maintain some defense. Also, we must explain the whys and wheres of military expenditures. For example, did you know that most of our money goes for people, for salaries? And we will need to make it clear in the future that we want the all-volunteer forces to be a part of society, not drawn from it. This won't be easy; this country hasn't had a peacetime situation for years. We haven't been without the draft since 1941."

But challenges are nothing new to Friedheim who's been meeting—and rising to—them most of his life. After his graduation he became an artillery captain, and then jumped into journalism. He worked for UPI, AP, the Neosho Daily News and the Joplin Globe, where his parents worked. He then returned to the School of Journalism where, as a graduate assistant, he spent his Saturdays "putting out the Sunday Missourian."

"Since then I've visited a lot of journalism schools in this job, but none that prepares students as well as Missouri. For one thing, no others as yet have the teaching facilities, the radio and TV stations and the Missourian. And no one has a better faculty." Friedheim completed his master's degree in 1962, after writing a weighty thesis on presidential press secretaries. Then, he received a fellowship from the American Political Science Association to spend a year in Washington studying the government.

That was the beginning of his blending of press work and politics. Remaining in the capital, he served as press secretary and military affairs assistant to Senator John Tower, R-Tex., and worked in the 1964 and 1968 campaigns for both Tower and Richard Nixon. In '68, he'd picked the winning team and, "when Secretary Laird came over to the Pentagon," Friedheim explains, "he asked me to come with him."

He's been at the Pentagon ever since, but it is a political appointment so he doesn't bank on being there forever. Where does he see himself as well as his wife Shirley and their three children—Daniel, 14; Cynthia, 13; and Thomas, 11—four years from now? Many people who leave here go into private industry or business, he says. "I was offered the deanship of Kansas State's Journalism school last summer. If it had come at a different time, I might have taken it. But at that time, it was beginning to seem that we would get the war ended and the prisoners back. The opportunity just came at the wrong time, because I still had a job to do for the Secretary of Defense and for the President." □

COP

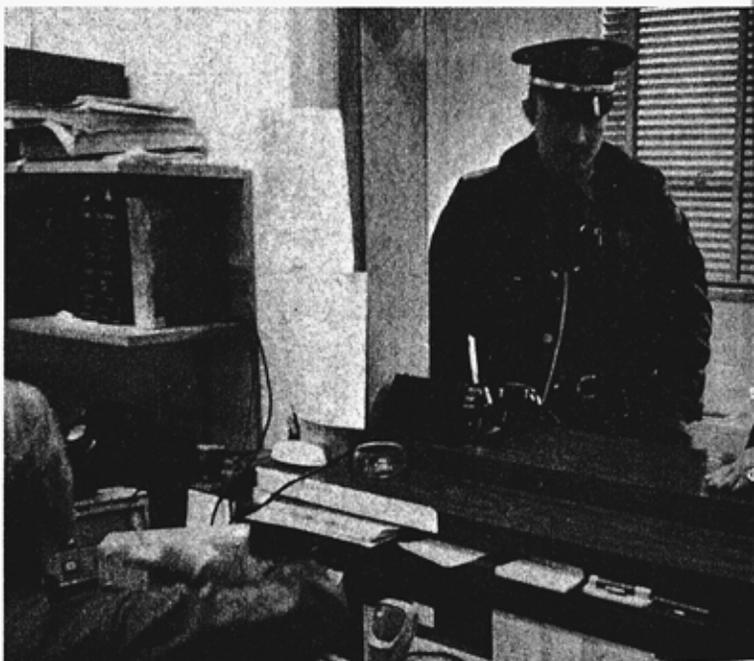

Patrolling the Campus, photographing the scene of a crime, or arresting a DWI offender is all in a day's work for 26-year-old Fran Williamson, a fully commissioned officer of the University of Missouri-Columbia police force. The brown-haired, blue-eyed cop who wears skirts received her commission last spring with the other male officers. She was the first woman ever to be commissioned on the University force.

A native of Columbia, she graduated from the University in 1968 with an AB in radio-TV, speech and drama. "I studied the technical side of theater. Designing and building sets, planning lighting and sound effects and so on. It's interesting work but not the easiest field to get a job in." So, after graduation she headed west, working at odd jobs here and there. "I even tried to sign on as a ranch hand in Nevada, but they wouldn't hire me." Then, in California, she had her first experience with something that resembled police work. "I became a stake-out on a construction site where materials and equipment had been disappearing. When someone would come and load up, I called the sheriff's office on my walkie-talkie and they took care of the apprehension."

After four months of travel and living from hand to mouth, she returned to Columbia and went to work processing traffic tickets at the University Police Department. "I was broke and needed a job. I worked as a secretary, a dispatcher and even in the lost and found department." Her move from the clerical to the investigative side of the office came through the "back door." The department needed a woman to do undercover work during the 1970 Campus demonstrations. Fran was sought out and trained for the job. "During the day I worked in the office and at night I mingled with students. I reported information to the office, but my sentiments were with the students. After the job was finished I had quite a time convincing some of my fellow workers that I had really been working for the department."

That assignment led to others and Fran began to pick up a law enforcement course here and there. Since then, her professional training has included seminars on emergency medical techniques, sex crimes, larceny and robbery; case investigations from the Missouri Highway Patrol; a graduate course in criminal law; FBI fingerprint training and graduation from the University Police Academy's 312-hour course. She's also had training in arson investigation. "For a long time, I tried to be a Boone County volunteer fireman. The department wouldn't accept me as a fireman but I did attend their training sessions."

Although Fran has had the same training as the male officers on the force and performs the same duties, she favors the technical end of law enforcement. "I might like to be in charge of a crime lab some day," she says. "I especially enjoy the photography aspect of the work. It's one area where someone can actually see what you've done. But, she also enjoys "being out in the field."

"Working burglary cases—there's a lot of that here—is like playing cops and robbers. Psychologically, both sides are playing a game. The stakes are high; it's us against them and a game of who outsmarts whom." Another aspect is the "privileged character status" police have. "You have access to knowledge and that is always an intoxicating thing. It's fun to know what is going on behind the scenes."

For the past six months she has been assigned to the patrol division on a test basis to determine the feasibility of using women as patrolmen. The department is considering hiring more women in that capacity, she says. As a patrolman, Fran has helped direct traffic, handled traffic violations, and followed up on complaints such as purse swappings.

She also sees her college education as aiding her in her career as a law enforcement officer. "There are very few techniques that I learned in radio-TV, film, theater that I haven't been able to put to use in my detective work, especially photography and video-tape use. As a police officer, you are at once a carpenter, locksmith, photographer, auto mechanic, diplomat, doctor, nurse and a lot more."

As for ever returning to a career in theater, "I don't think so," Fran says. "But, I would like to work on a stage crew on a hobby basis." Most of her spare time now though is taken up in starting a part-time business of raising, training and selling horses. She has three horses she keeps on 30 acres of leased land about 10 miles west of Columbia. And, she also holds dual commissions with the Boone County Sheriff and the Columbia Police Department.

"The Sheriff's Office sometimes calls me for assistance at night, especially when they've taken a female into custody." But, Fran does not see her job or role as different in any way from her male counterparts. "European women have had equivalent status with men in police forces for a long time. Eventually it will happen here. I had no trouble being accepted by my fellow officers, though I did expect some. Maybe it's because I came up through the ranks. They knew me before I became an officer candidate. Also, I try to strike a happy balance around the office. The helpless female would be as out of place around here as the masculine female would. □

AGRICULTURE AND THE COMMON MARKET

by Stanley Andrews, BJ '21

Published by the Iowa State University Press, this book offers a history of the development of the Common Market, the viewpoints of all member nations and assesses the implications of this development on American agriculture and international agriculture trade. The author is an international consultant in agricultural development for the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the State Department and for private organizations as well.

KONTAKIA OF ROMANOS, BYZANTINE MELODIST II: ON CHRISTIAN LIFE

by Marjorie Carpenter, AB '18, BS Ed '18, AM '20

Volume II of this two-volume work completes the presentation in English of the known works of Romanos, a famous sixth-century, Byzantine melodist-poet. The author, a former professor of classics and humanities at Stephens College, was awarded the honorary Doctor of Letters degree from the University of Missouri in 1972. Both volumes have been published by the University of Missouri Press.

DEATH AS A FACT OF LIFE

by David Hendin, BS Ed '67, AM '70

Published by W. W. Norton & Company, New York, this book considers the psychological and ethical aspects of death and dying. The author, science editor of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, answers such questions as: when is a person legally dead, what are the arguments for euthanasia, what are the reactions of dying patients to their imminent death and what are the feelings and needs of a mourner? This is his fourth book on science and medical subjects.

LETTERS FROM THE DARKLING PLAIN, Language and the Grounds of Knowledge in the Poetry of Arnold and Hopkins

by Dr. Howard W. Fulweiler

This book, published by the University of Missouri Press, deals individually with Arnold and Hopkins and shows how two major Victorian poets faced the dilemma of language in a changed world and devoted the greater share of their creative energies to the problem of establishing under new conditions the grounds of knowledge in relation to the function of poetic art. The author is a Professor of English at the Columbia Campus.

RING AROUND MAX, The Correspondence of Ring Lardner and Maxwell Perkins

Edited by Clifford M. Caruthers, AB '57, PhD '68

This 188-page volume, published by the Northern Illinois University Press, is the first collection of Lardner correspondence ever published. "The Perkins-Lardner correspondence (becomes) the record of Lardner's emergence as a result from writer to author, from merely a popular columnist to a recognized satirist and incisive depicter of the comedy and depravity of the populace," Caruthers writes. The author is a member of the NIU English department faculty.

THE WOMEN CITIZENS

by J. Stanley Lemons, PhD '67

In this book, published by the University of Illinois Press, the author traces the decline of the social feminist movement after the defeat of the child labor amendment in 1925. He documents the social feminists conflict with the hard-core feminists of the National Woman's Party, the weakening of social feminism due to proliferation of professional organizations and the difficulties caused by charges that feminist groups were part of a spider web to promote communist objectives. He is an associate professor of history at Rhode Island College.

THE WIZARD OF WESTWOOD

by Dwight Chapin and Jeff Prugh, BJ '62

Here is a book that describes John Wooden's early years as an Indiana farm-boy, an honor student and All-American at Purdue and at the peak of his career, coaching the UCLA basketball dynasty. Bill Sharman, Laker coach, calls it "an in-depth story about a great coach and a great person. An amazing revelation of critics who seem to resent his success and dedication to winning." The book is published by Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. The authors are reporters for the Los Angeles Times.

CAPTAINS AND CABINETS

by David Trask

Published by the University of Missouri Press, this book describes the course of decision-making that led to the successful Allied effort against the German Navy in World War I. The author, chairman of the department of history at State University of New York, Stony Brook, focuses on the conflicts that arose, especially between America and Britain over early British dominance of Allied naval plans.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S "RELIGIO MEDICI" AND TWO SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY CRITICS

by James Wise

This detailed analysis of Browne's best-known work and the criticism against it by two of his major critics reveals not only the divergent views of three prominent 17th century literary men, but much about the controversies in science and religion that dominated the intellectual world of that period. Wise is associate professor of English at the University of Missouri-Rolla. The book is published by the University of Missouri Press.

LETTERS

To the editor:

While I find most of the Missouri Alumnus very interesting I especially found the new "Role and Scope: What It Means for UMC" document in the January-February issue meaningful as steps for upgrading the four campuses.

As to the three-section format, it is a helpful way of presenting the contents since it enables one to turn readily to the particular subject matter in which he is interested at a given time. Most of us perhaps turn first to the News About People, but each section is of special interest to different readers and it is my desire that the Missouri Alumnus may continue to be packaged in this way.

Mrs. Claude E. Johnson, BS Agr '21
Moody, Okla.

To the editor:

The Alumnus, as so many other publications, presents excellent color plates. However, again as the others, you fail to make them frameable by splitting them on two pages. The January-February issue is a prime example.

W. H. Eaton, BS ME '48
Kansas City, Mo.

To the editor:

Your magazine was part of an unusual batch of mail which I received today. The primary piece of mail was an apology from Time magazine expressing their regret for identifying a photo of Missouri players blocking Rich Glover, Nebraska (in their Dec. 18 issue) as Minnesota. I had chastised them earlier for the error. Last, and possibly not least, was the Missouri Alumnus with its heart-rending plea for correspondence. Since I am at present rather pleased with myself because of the above-mentioned mail, I'm taking this time to write to you as you requested.

First, my congratulations on an excellent magazine. The article on the fight song in the last issue was most enjoyable. I even went so far as to clip the illustration and use it for a rear window decal.

Second, the article on Tucker Prairie was also excellent. The photos were beautiful.

Third, and the substance of the commentary, is my reaction to the "Student View" opinion by Rich Gross. I could not agree with him more fully. Perhaps the dominant principle in America (at least in a pragmatic sense) has been the right of persons to do what they want with their money. The idea of the University telling the students how they can spend their funds seems to me to be socialistic, if not Communistic. Is this any way to run a University?

Keep up the good work.

Robert S. Lauderdale, AB '71
Independence, Mo.

To the editor:

Keep up the good work! I read the three-section package completely. It's fun to keep up with my friends at the University.

As a 1968 graduate of the School of Journalism and reporter with the Kansas City Star, it is particularly gratifying to see such a fine piece of journalism as the Alumnus.

Let's work for continued support from friends, alumni and, of course, the Legislature!

G. Fred Wickman, BJ '68
Kansas City, Mo.

To the editor:

I note with considerable regret and some misgivings the "Student View" article in the January-February issue of the Missouri Alumnus. My chagrin and disappointment are predicated on the following:

1. I assumed there was a journalistic dictum which encouraged the presentation of both sides of a controversial question. The article in question slanted in only one direction, made several statements which had no foundation in fact, and did not provide the University Administration's position. Apparently, these statements by Mr. Gross, the author, were accepted at face value and printed without verification.

2. The figures cited in the article are incorrect. Apparently, Mr. Gross was permitted to publish amounts which were not researched and validated. In the article, Mr. Gross states that $4 of the Student Activity Fee is applied toward retiring bonds on the Memorial Union and the Brady Commons and that $6 is used to repay the bonds on the Hearnes Multipurpose Building. These facts are incorrect. Instead, $6 goes toward retiring bonds on the Memorial Union and the Brady Commons, and $4 is applied for retirement of the bonds on the new Hearnes Multipurpose Building.

I believe I understand the objective behind printing an article which states student views; that is, to permit the Missouri Alumnus to provide information not only about alumni, but to permit alumni to read about what today's student is thinking. This seems to be a worthwhile objective; however, it seems to me that the persistency of certain students, particularly certain MSA student leaders, to misstate facts and to distort controversial issues does not provide a proper basis for the quality of journalism and reporting that is merited by the Missouri Alumnus.

To the editor:

Glenn H. Doughty (Letters, January-February) underestimates himself! He probably has a dozen stories or more he could tell that would interest UMC students of all eras. Three are suggested in his letter: The one student who had a car, Jimmie's College Inn, the old Missouri Store and if chocolate milk was the popular drink, what were the other choices? Also, what did you get for $500--an always popular topic when discussed by one who was there.

As for writing, there's the problem about finding the address if you have an impulse to write and have already thrown away the plastic wrapper. Perhaps if the address were at the bottom of the "Letters" page more people would follow through on impulse.

Editor's Note: Our address does appear at the beginning of the class notes section.

To the editor:

I do enjoy the Alumnus, especially the sports pages. But, I don't see many notes about the class of 1916. Maybe we're getting too old to write.

I haven't been back to the University since 1921 so I'm sure I'd have trouble finding my way around. Just hope the Columns are still there.

To the editor:

I was most interested in the article on the computer in the January-February issue. To some, it might seem complicated to have one computer serve all branches of the University, but I am familiar with a similar situation.

I am on the board of directors of a savings and loan association with 12 offices that use one IBM 370-145 computer. The computer also serves all the accounts for 26 other savings and loan companies from Santa Barbara, Calif., to Phoenix, Ariz. There are 450 terminals and 1.2 million accounts. The data all goes through the one computer here in Claremont, Calif.

My wife and I always enjoy getting the Alumnus.

To the editor:

I had a difficult time locating the B&PA (now CAPA) column in the latest Missouri Alumnus. Had not the name of Pinkney Walker been in bold print, I probably would never have found it. I quite vividly recall being a student in one of Dean Walker's classes. Prior to an exam, the yet to become dean, once related to us that he had given the exam to a shoeshine boy at the barber shop. The good news was no one should have any trouble since the shoeshine boy scored an S+. After the exam scores were posted the big question was--Did President Elmer Ellis realize that Dr. Bradshaw (then B&PA Dean) was obviously moonlighting as a shoeshine boy?

To the editor:

A few notes on the January-February Alumnus, one of the most interesting in recent months.

Three cheers for the special magazine for seniors. Is the book only available to seniors? I'm most interested in obtaining a copy.

Please keep up posted on the progress (if any) the "Bankruptcy Plan" makes. What great encouragement for someone who's "run amuck"--a fresh start and "semi-clean" slate.

But dearest to my heart was the story about the Shack. It's comforting to know it's still there, in all its glory, when so many "landmarks" are being replaced by parking lots.

To the editor:

Sue Hale's article on the Shack (January-February 1973) brought back pleasant memories of post-WWII days at 'Ol Mizsou. I recall going to the Shack occasionally, mostly to take in the atmosphere since I couldn't afford more than a couple of beers a week on the G. I. Bill. The atmosphere was unique--booths and furniture carved so much they resembled engravings; students lounging around in casual sweaters and rumpled slacks; female dates in long dresses, then the fashion rage. The tempo was slow and everyone seemed to enjoy himself.

To the editor:

After enjoying the Missouri Alumnus for seven years, I guess I should let you know about it. I do enjoy it, and I read just about everything in it, even the news of divisions other than my own, journalism. It's interesting to see what the other divisions are up to, and also once in awhile the name of a teacher of mine or a course I took will be mentioned.

Comment: I think you should have more pictures of current campus scenes, to let us know what's changed and what's the same. That picture of the Shack brought back a surge of memories. I doubt if I set foot inside the place more than three times during my four years at MU, but I walked past it at least twice a day every day of those four years. And it still looks exactly the same!

To the editor:

Congratulations on publishing the first correct story on the history of The Shack, probably better known to a lot of alumni as Jack's Shack.

Not only did I enjoy the article for its factual accuracy, but I learned something. Would you believe that during some six or seven years of going into The Shack, I never knew--or if I knew I certainly had forgotten--Mary and Vernon Blakemore's last name! Like everybody else in those late 1930s and 1940s, I knew Mary as Mary and Vernon as Vernon. . . and I am indeed sorry to learn Vernon is no longer with us.

What Ms. Hale couldn't report because she wasn't there is how many times Mary, who was far from meddlesome or overly talkative, saved some coed's campus career with a quiet but firm, "Honey--you better go home!" Whether the problem originated with the girl herself or her date, that sound advice was often taken just in time to prevent some real unpleasantness from happening. And Vernon became the repository of more male problems, not a few of which began, "Vernon, I've just flunked out. . . What do I do now?" Like Mary, his advice was pretty sound. Today I cannot help but wonder how many middle-aged folk like me read the story of The Shack and saw long-forgotten faces and heard voices that fell silent long ago amid some very personal very private thoughts.

But one word of warning for those who haven't been back. It is contained in the article, but may not register--students don't go to The Shack like they used to. I learned that with a shock some six or seven years ago. I was wheeling across country by automobile--mainly because I'd never done it before--and I stretched my driving to reach Columbia one evening.

Jesse Hall was locked up tight--at 8 p.m.! So I walked across the street and naturally headed into The Shack. At 8:30 in the evening the place was deserted except for one person who might have been a customer and someone behind the counter. They both looked around, startled, when the door opened. I looked to see if I could identify the old Model T booth still, realized something was wrong after only 25 years, and left.

Yes, I guess The Shack is indeed a relic of a long-gone era, but for those who were there on rocking Saturday nights, or carefully carved some pretty young lady's initials into the wood of one of those booths, it is part of a scene none of us will ever forget. It's kind of nice, too, to know not everything from that era has vanished!
