

PERCEPTIONS OF CHILDHOOD AS INDICATORS OF EARLY ATTACHMENT
DEFICITS AMONG INDIVIDUALS WITH A HISTORY OF VIOLENT CRIME

Anita Kiessling-Caver

Dr. Dale Fitch, Dissertation

Supervisor

ABSTRACT

This qualitative study utilizing constructivist grounded theory, explores the potential effects of insecure attachment on the development of violent behaviors in adulthood. A negative case analysis model is used to analyze potential intervening variables between style of attachment security and violence or non-violence. Findings suggest bipolar disorder as a mediator of secure attachment, and the presence of distortions of the internal working model in those with insecure attachment and violent histories.