

MISSOURI ALUMNUS

OCTOBER 1969

education edition

A new publications . . .

program was begun by your Alumni Association this fall to serve two paradoxical trends.

On the one hand, emphasis on interdisciplinary programs is resulting in growing interaction among the 14 academic divisions. During their four or five years on campus, our students likely are exposed to several different departments and divisions. For this reason, campus identification never has been stronger.

On the other hand, alumni are becoming more and more oriented professionally. On a campus of 20,000 students, being a member of the class of '70 is not nearly as important as being an engineer, or a doctor, or whatever. Some of the Association's best-attended meetings are the professional get-togethers, not the general ones.

Therefore, the Missouri Alumnus becomes a general campus edition in September, November-December, February, and May. Divisional editions — eight of them — are published in October, January, March-April, and June.

This month you received the edition of the division from which you were graduated. If you want another edition instead — or if you want to receive more than one — fill out the card on page 25.

THE FLIP-FLOP BLOC

Probably no course is as important to an educator's career as practice teaching. It's where the action is; it's where the student learns to use his classroom knowledge. Now, the College of Education is reorganizing its practice teaching program to give its students more intensified training in this important phase of their college work.

Instead of being a part-time teacher and a part-time student for a semester, the student under the new program will become a full-time teacher for eight weeks. The other eight weeks of the semester will be devoted to a concentrated course in the education curriculum. The class might be considered the equivalent of summer session course work.

This new program is listed in the College's bulletin as the "Senior Professional Education Semester." To students and faculty, this new concept is known more simply as the "bloc program."

Associate Dean Robert L. Burton explains the bloc program is not new in the education field, but it has not been instituted on the Columbia campus because, "It is difficult for a large University to adopt this system." With an increasing number of students teaching in their senior year, however, the University Laboratory School and the Columbia public schools have become overburdened with student teachers.

Under the bloc program, the 1100 student teachers during the 1969-70 school year will teach not only in the Central Missouri area, but also in St. Louis and Kansas City.

"This bloc was designed," Burton says, "to fit the Columbia campus needs." The program is arranged so those students who live in the Kansas City and St. Louis area can live there while fulfilling their eight weeks of student teaching. In the mid-Missouri area, most of the students live in Columbia and commute five days a week to their "classroom."

Allowing students to live at home during their student teaching period and reducing the great number who must teach in local schools are obvious advantages of the bloc

Going over reading assignment with the regular first-grade teacher is student Margaret Nuss, also pictured on page 2.

Kindergartners need individual attention. This one gets it from student teacher Sara Matthews, who benefits from bloc program by being with the children for the entire semester.

Sara also learns to supervise group play during recess.

"If a student has done well in his student teaching, he is almost assured of a contract."

program. Director of Student Teaching Dr. Carey T. Southall, who oversees the placement of student teachers, says the bloc is "easier to schedule, easier to administer, and the students like it."

The College has been making a gradual transition to the bloc program since the 1968-69 school year. This limited bloc program will be continued, primarily in the elementary grades and in social studies, English and physical education secondary classes, for the present school year. "By 1970-71 we plan to have everybody on the bloc program," Burton says.

According to Southall, the program, when operating on a full scale, is often termed the "flip-flop" bloc, meaning that half of the students will teach for the first eight weeks of the semester. The next eight weeks the "teachers" will change (flip-flop) places with the other half of the students in the eight week education course.

The advantages of the bloc program are more than organizational. The response has been positive from those students who have participated in the program. Better grades are one reason for the popularity of student teaching and Southall suggests this program gives the student a higher degree of motivation because he can devote full time to student teaching: "In one bloc plan, the student has a realistic view of what it is like to be a teacher." Removal of classwork with student teaching enables the novice teacher to have more time for preparing lesson plans and daily activities.

A tangible outgrowth of the bloc system is student employment. School system administrators and students both find placement problems somewhat eased. For instance, the student teaching in St. Louis County who is pleased with his eight week efforts may seek a job in that school system following his graduation. On the other side, the school system already knows the caliber of this teacher and escapes some of the bogdown of recruiting.

"If a student has done well in his student teaching," Burton says, "he is almost assured of a contract from that school system."

The College of Education also derives its share of benefits. The employment of Columbia campus graduates reflects upon the reputation of the College. As a result, the College is, as Burton put it, "well established" in student teaching. According to Southall, our students are "well received" in all districts where they student teach: "A large number of students have been hired by the schools in which they student taught."

The bloc program is so structured that the student teacher maintains at least weekly contact with Columbia campus personnel. Located in Kansas City and St. Louis are resident coordinators of student teaching. Their job encompasses directing the supervisors who deal directly with the students. The mid-Missouri area falls under Columbia campus jurisdiction.

These supervisors are the link between the College and the public school. A supervisor, for example, is responsible for visiting his practice teachers a minimum of three times during the eight-week teaching bloc. In addition, the supervisor conducts weekly seminars for his student teachers. These seminars are designed to meet several needs. The student, most importantly, gains self-assurance in the knowledge his classroom problems are shared by his fellow students. Sometimes the late afternoon seminars will be a formal lecture while some afternoons may turn into a rehash of daily experiences. The supervisor also maintains office hours so a student may discuss a problem he does not wish to share in the seminar.

The bloc program also has its problems. As Southall says, "Anytime you change a program, it takes a while to perfect it." Instituting the bloc program has conflicted with student housing. But Burton says the housing office has been "most cooperative" in seeking a solution to the eight weeks of the semester when the student is away from Columbia. Housing may not prove to be a major problem, however, since past statistics show a large number of the student teachers do not live in University housing and many of them are married.

In his experience with the College of Education, Burton notes around five per cent of the students "won't fit" the student teaching program and must be handled as individual cases. Southall agrees these problems are inevitable. What can you say, he asks, to the coed who doesn't want to teach out of Columbia because of her five boy-friends? □

For Friday afternoon "TGIFing", Linda Hedenkamp and Harris Gaynor sport the favorite look for Columbia campus students.

Typical gathering spot, the M-Store, catches (l to r) Richard Tapscott, Neil Sloman and Vicky Antonello in typical campus attire, mini skirt and plaid slacks.

What is really new in fashion at Missouri boils down to "just about anything." Mizzou students, while not as flamboyant as models in fashion magazines, are quick to follow the latest and the newest clothing trends.

Student Style Setters

Hosiery, in assorted lengths and colors, is popular with Debbie McKay. The "nude look" in stockings is preferred by her date, Mike Bailenson.

The guidelines for campus attire are suggested in the M-Book and at the Association of Women Students' well-attended fashion show.

With six theaters and 20,000 University students, Carol Holden and Bruce Studer decided to arrive early for movie tickets.

The long and the short of this year's fashion shows Sonja Hillgren (left) in a maxi coat with a nine-foot fringed scarf while Cheryl Grider scarfs her shorter pea coat, Jim Aldrich's monk strap shoes and slightly flared slacks also are "in" at Columbia.

A dark suit is always a smart choice in evening wear when Steve Uzzell escorts Julie Viers, a semi-finalist in Glamour Magazine's best-dressed contest. She wears the sheer look in tunic and pants.

Everything from long hair and "grubbies" to ties and heels can be seen on this midwestern campus. As a feature editor of the student newspaper put it, "no one's sure what is 'in' for a change, thank God."

Missouri Graduates Aid In Success of Apollo 11

As Apollo 11 made its way into space for a lunar landing, many graduates and faculty members of the Columbia campus watched its progress with more than a detached interest. A substantial number of alumni played important roles in the planning, actual flight, and later analysis of the lunar project.

A University professor was notable among those involved in Apollo 11. Dr. Charles W. Gehrke, professor of agricultural chemistry and research associate in space sciences, who with a team of five University scientists joined others at NASA laboratories in Ames, California, is a key figure in studying the rock samples brought back by the astronauts of Apollo 11. His field is genetic code molecules and amino acids, and his aim was to discover whether such compounds exist in the moon rocks. Amino acids and genetic code molecules are present in every living organism on this planet.

A 1967 graduate, Dr. JAMES L. McQUEEN, BS Agr. '57, DVM '57, took part in the mission as chief of the microbiology lunar receiving laboratory in NASA's Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston.

Chief of the support systems branch at the Houston Center is JAMES A. MILLER, BS EE '59, who was also vitally involved in Apollo 11's flight.

EARL G. HOARD, BS BA '50, is an aerospace technologist in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Marshall Space Flight Center, Huntsville, Alabama. Marshall Center is NASA's largest organization and it was there that the Saturn V rocket that lifted Apollo 11 from earth was developed.

Capt. ROBERT M. EDWARDS, BS EE '65, worked on the atmospheric re-entry phase of the space flight. He is an astronautical engineer at the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston. Captain Edwards is one of 150 select Air Force members assigned to duty with NASA in conjunction with the space program.

Captain Edwards' role in the mission was to assure that simulations of problems encountered in returning the astronauts safely through the earth's atmosphere were reliable. Study of such problems as those of guidance depended upon his verification of equations used in simulating what goes on inside the spacecraft and in directing it into the precise and safe re-entry corridor. Captain Edwards holds an MS in astronautics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A member of the Air Force Communications Service special task force supporting the Apollo 11 Lunar landing mission was Technical Sergeant WALTER D. SHAY, Agr. '50. He is a communications technician with the 3rd Mobile Communications Group at Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma, a unit which supports all manned space flights.

Another Ol' Mizzou graduate assisting Apollo 11 was Captain WILLIAM P. DOTSON, Jr., BS EE '65. Captain Dotson, an electrical engineer at the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston, helped to validate automated functions accomplished aboard the spacecraft to assure that computers in the ground network were configured to implement the functions.

Involved in the design of the rendezvous between the command and lunar modules after the moonlanding was Captain HAROLD O. SPURLIN, MBA '68. He is an astronautical engineer at the Manned Spacecraft Center. He assisted with previously determined and computer-verified alternate maneuvers to effect the rendezvous in the event the original plan was hampered.

Although the flight of Apollo 11 went off smoothly, it was not without the aid of graduates of the University, who not only worked in all stages of the planning of the mission but were also on hand in case of emergencies to make adjustments necessary for successful completion of the lunar landing.

Announce McAfee Award

Union Electric Company of St. Louis, has announced the J. W. McAfee Scholarship Program upon the retirement of JAMES WESLEY McAFEE, LLB '26, as president and chief executive officer.

In announcing the scholarship program, Charles J. Dougherty, president of Union Electric said "Beginning next spring, a J. W. McAfee Scholar will be selected annually by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation from among the children of Union Electric employees. In any year in which no child of an employee qualifies for the award, it will be given to a child of a Union Electric customer. Each scholarship will be for four years of study at the college or university of the student's choice.

"Over the four-year period, a J. W. McAfee Scholar will receive $1000 to $6000 depending on the scholar's need," Dougherty said.

McAfee retired as an employee of Union Electric on August 31. He will continue to preside as chairman at meetings of the board of directors. He plans to maintain his other business and civic associations and activities. He joined U.E. in 1941 as president.

BOOKS

Charles James Fox: A Man for the People Loren Reid, Professor of Rhetoric and Public Speaking.

This full-length biography describes and analyzes the speeches of Fox, a member of Parliament and foreign secretary for Britain in the early 19th century. Although his speeches were "magical" as Sir William Pitt once said, his faults of temperament plus political blunders often kept him in disfavor. An advocate of the American and French revolutions and opposer of slave trade, Fox was able to enact some enlightened legislation, including the libel bill.

Reid's book, published by the University Press, focuses attention on Fox's personality and speechmaking and keeps to a minimum the general historical background.

The Urban Polity

William O. Winter, AB '42, AM '47

Published by Dodd, Mead and Company, Winter's book is designed to help the reader develop an urban theory based on anthropological, historical and empirical data, before being introduced to the complex maze of facts that comprise a city's typical life. Through an examination of the environment of a city, its relation to other governments, the structure and structure of city administration, and the problem of policy-making, Winter shows that politics and administration are one.

Frank Parsons: Prophet, Innovator, Counselor

Howard Davis, AM '41

This is the first full-length study of the "father" of vocational guidance. Davis is a professor of education at SIU. The SIU Press published the book.

A History of the Fee Family

Col. Ralph E. Pearson, AM '50

Pearson, the author of a column, "Your Family and Mine," began this as a project to prove that almost anyone can trace their ancestry if they wish. The 1,103 page study includes sketches of well-known Fees, McFees, McPhees, and McAfees in this country as well as such towns as Feeston, Feesburg, McAfee, McPhee, McAfee's Knob, and Felicity.

Relevant Servant: The Story of Charles D. Ross

Ronald T. Farrar, Ph.D. '65

University Press has published the biography of President Truman's former Presidential press secretary, confidante, and advisor. Ross was an original faculty member of the School of Journalism at the University. He later served on the Washington bureau of the St. Louis Post Dispatch and edited the editorial page, until he was made Press Secretary by his boyhood friend, Harry S. Truman.

The Regulators: Watchdog Agencies and the Public Interest

Louis M. Kohlmeier, Jr., BJ '50

Kohlmeier, a Pulitzer prize-winning reporter, wrote this book to shed new light on how the federal regulatory agencies have failed in their purpose, which is to protect the American consumer. The book exposes various watchdog agencies and examines in detail the ways in which they often promote rather than police. The publisher is Harper and Row.

Network Computer Analysis

Editor: Dr. GEORGE W. ZOBRIST, BS EE '58, Ph.D. '65

Released by Boston Technical Publishers, Cambridge, Massachusetts, this 300-page compilation of technical papers on computer-aided design is a reference for practicing engineers and engineering graduate students. Dr. Zobrist is associate professor of electrical engineering at the University.

To the editor:

As an old B. J. who through his faculty position in Journalism at Iowa State University has some chance to compare, I must tell you what a good job you and your associates have been doing with the Missouri Alumnus. In appearance and content it is far better than most other such publications I see.

But as a veteran newsman who hates to lose a story angles left out I was disappointed by what I didn't read in one item in the Commentary section of the September Alumnus. It's the item reporting almost one-fourth of freshmen flunked German in Fall '68, and almost half the Fall '67 freshmen got either D or F in the same course.

Unanswered was a big question: Why? And its corollary: Is anything being done about this? With only five years of college-level teaching experience Heaven knows I'm no expert, but it seems to me there's something grossly off of line here which a university ought to be concerned about. Since alumni are often asked to contribute to funds intended to help improve the quality of instruction, the question is of interest to them, too.

I plead guilty to a certain amount of personal interest in this area. One of my sons left Missouri after his freshman year because of what he felt was a ghastly experience with a graduate student-taught language course (not German.) He has since received his B.A. degree with a 3-point average at another institution and has been accepted for law school studies.

Jack Shelley, BJ '35

To the editor:

The September 1969 issue of Missouri Alumnus carried an article by Congressman Richard H. Ichord entitled "SDS and Student Disruption the Way I See It." Alumnus Ichord is chairman of what was called "one of Congress's most important groups, the Internal Security Committee." Most of us know this committee by its former name of HUAC . . . House Un-American Activities Committee. And those who know HUAC's odious history of witch hunting would not see the importance of HUAC, no matter what it was renamed. That is, unless you consider a committee such as this one "important" because of its potential dangers to the American way of life; then I would have to say that the Internal Security Committee is, perhaps, THE most important committee in Congress and one which deserves much more public scrutiny.

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom presented some interesting and frightening data in their July 1969 "Washington Newsletter." In an attempt to counter the false impression given by Congressman Ichord as to the validity of his committee's purposes, I believe that this information should be obtained and read by all of our alumni.

If the Internal Security Act of 1969 ever becomes law, it is certain that George Orwell's 1984 police state will arrive ahead of schedule. This bill, similar to one introduced last year, represents a wide-ranging assault on the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Constitution. Sponsored by Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss.) and 16 co-sponsors, it is composed of 10 titles with hundreds of provisions amending present security laws and enacting new security laws, many of which are clearly unconstitutional. Furthermore, there is no main theme or internal logic; it is a dangerous hodgepodge of measures which would increase institutionalized repression.

The Internal Security Act of 1969 would not protect this country's internal security; that is protected by preserving our freedoms under the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Congressman Ichord, as chairman of the Internal Security Committee, heads up a committee more potentially dangerous to the future of the United States of America and its traditions and heritage than do all SDS chapters in this country!

To the editor:

As an alumnus and supporter of the University of Missouri, I am pleased with the manner in which the University has been administered, particularly as to the question of academic rights and freedom.

I especially enjoyed the article by our Congressman and personal friend, Dick Ichord, in this month's Missouri Alumnus.

F. Gano Chance, AB '29, BS Che '29
Centralia, Missouri

To the editor:

I would like to reply to the article in the September issue of the Missouri Alumnus concerning student disruptions. Maybe I can give you a few examples of why I and many young people are disenchanted.

In the article mentioned above you print a statement by President Weaver in which he says, "at the University of Missouri there will be an unassailable freedom of speech and thought." However, I seem to recall an article in the Alumnus in which a student publication was banned because of objectionable language. Also, when I was a student at Missouri, I helped publish a newspaper using off campus materials, and was chastised I might add for not allowing a proper official of the campus to read it and make suggestions before printing. I believe I've said enough and had enough of "academic rights and freedoms" as now practiced.

Mr. Ichord says "I am firmly convinced that we need to improve our enforcement of existing laws to maintain law and order."

May I suggest that Mr. Ichord spend less time investigating how to control student disruptions and more time alleviating the causes.

The radicals are presently a minority, but the repeated use of repressive methods to suppress dissent will increase our numbers. We have had enough of the grandiose statements by our "leaders" concerning justice, law and order, free speech, and etc. We demand that such rights as stated in our constitution be grounded on reality, not rhetoric.

AT THE ALUMNI LEADERS MEETING

Meeting before the Air Force-Tiger game were the deans of faculties of the two schools, both Columbia campus alumni, Brig. Gen. William Woodyard, left, and Dr. Herbert W. Schooling.

Victor J. Hinton, retired Joplin businessman, adjusts model of Columns he made and presented to Alumni Association for use as meeting centerpiece.

In Columbia for Alumni Association Board of Directors meeting were, left to right, John Schweitzer, Kansas City; Red Graham, Westport, Connecticut; and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Simons, Kansas City.

Visiting with Chancellor and Mrs. John W. Schwada, right, are Dr. and Mrs. Gerald Johnson, representing veterinary medicine. The Johnsons are from Independence, Mo.

SPORTS

If this is a typical Missouri freshman football squad, there is somewhere on it an unheralded boy who is playing without benefit of scholarship—but who will get one before next season rolls around.

He's what the coaches call a "walk-on candidate," and usually one or more of his kind fight their way to varsity favor, while some of their more publicized high school stars never play a down.

Even so, Missouri coaches are pretty successful recruiters in all sports; so it is with more than passing interest that the real sports buff scans the list of freshmen scholarship recruits. He knows that future Tiger stars are there.

Among the 41 freshmen footballers receiving scholarship help are these 11, tabbed as above-average prospects:

Jack Bastable, 5-11, 190-pound halfback from Arlington, Illinois. A two-year all-stater, Bastable was rated one of the two best backs in the Chicago area and also is a good student.

Larry Frost, 6-2, 198-pound linebacker from St. Louis (Normandy). Frost was an all-metro selection on defense and also was a top fullback.

Scott Henderson, 6-1, 225, Kansas City (Oak Park). An all-state center for one of the top teams in the state, Henderson also is rated a prospect at tackle.

Mike Jeffries, 6-4, 220-pound quarterback from Alton, Illinois. An all-American in football and all-state in basketball, Jeffries is at Missouri on a dual scholarship.

Chris Kirley, 6-4, 215-pound tackle and end from Peoria, Illinois. Chosen captain of the all-state team, the strong, fast Kirley also is a top-notch student and was regarded as the top high school lineman in Illinois.

Scott Nelson, 6-0, 190-pound halfback from Evergreen, Colorado. Nelson was a one-man track team for his high school, participating in five events, including the sprints and hurdles.

Bob Pankey, 6-1, 185-pound quarterback from Carbondale, Illinois. A two-time all-stater, Pankey was considered one of the three top high school signal callers in Illinois.

Pete Ramirez, 5-11, 210-pound linebacker from San Antonio, Texas. Ramirez is from the same high school that produced James Harrison, a member of the Tiger varsity.

Scott Sodergren, 6-0, 195-pound linebacker from Jefferson City. An outstanding student, Sodergren also won all-state grid honors.

Booker T. Washington, 6-2, 195-pound tailback from Galveston. One of the highly sought-after Texas athletes, Washington also was a track star.

Roger Yanko, a 5-11, 192-pound halfback from St. Louis (McBride). Yanko was named to the all-metro team as a defensive back and also led his team in scoring.

Seven others won Missouri all-state honors in one of the four divisions: Randy Weber, 6-2, 180, end, Raytown; Dan Nerling, 5-10, 200, halfback, Independence; Tom Kellett, 6-2, 185, linebacker, St. Louis; Dave Austin, 6-0, 180, quarterback, Joplin; Frank Caldwell, 6-1, 200, end, Shelbina; Jay Ware, 6-0, 180, quarterback, Pleasant Hill; and Bob Larison, 5-10, 185, halfback, Weston.

Coach Norm Stewart, apparently moving ahead in his battle to restore Missouri to basketball respectability, recruited seven freshmen in "the same mold of the boys who have won for me before."

He chose them on the basis of their ball handling, shooting ability, and mobility — and six of the seven are top students, too. Five are 6-5 or over, including two Missouri all-staters, John Brown, 6-7, of Dixon, and Bill Foster, 6-8, of Webster Groves.

"I wish they had more physical strength," says Stewart, "but strength can come; ability has to be there."

The other coaches may have help this year from some of their recruits, as freshmen are eligible for all varsity sports except football and basketball.

Track Coach Tom Botts has recruited 12 boys "of the type who will develop." He's especially high on Steven Wilson, of St. Louis, the state cross-country champion, who has run the mile in 4:15.8, and Mark Visk, of Palatine, Illinois, who won his state's two-mile with a time of 9:06.1.

Baseball Coach Hi Simmons likes the chances of John Anderson, a left-handed pitcher from Tabor, Iowa. Hap Whitney has two wrestlers who were state champions: Bob Dameron, of Kansas City (Oak Park), 120 pounds, and Joe Morell, of Wichita, Kansas, 180 pounds.

Swimming Coach Joe Goldfarb is proud of two high school all-Americans, breaststroker, Dennis Bush, of Peoria, Illinois, and the Missouri state diving champion, Larry Renfro, of Kansas City.

Two members of Jefferson City's state high school champions are joining Al Chandler's golfers. They are Tom McHenry, who was the individual high school champ in the state, and Bill Wells, the runner-up.

Receive

Faculty-Alumni

Awards

Eleven alumni and 11 members of the faculty of the University of Missouri-Columbia will be honored October 10 at the second annual Faculty-Alumni Awards dinner sponsored by the Alumni Association.

Purpose of the award program is three-fold:

- To recognize achievement at all levels by the faculty and alumni. Assistant, associate and full professors all are considered for their work as teachers, researchers and administrators. Alumni of all age levels are considered for both their potential and actual accomplishments in professional life and in service to the University.

- To focus attention on these persons, on their accomplishments, on their relationships to the University and on the relationship between faculty and alumni in promoting the best interests of the University.

- To bring together the recipients, their colleagues and other University and alumni leaders to express the pride and appreciation of the Alumni Association for these people and for the principle of service to higher education.

Others attending the dinner will be members of the Board of Curators, President John C. Weaver, Chancellor John W. Schwada, Columbia campus deans and members of the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Dr. and Mrs. Schwada will hold a reception at the Chancellor's Residence before the dinner.

The honorees will receive framed citations and antique gold medallions specially struck for the award. Their names also will be added to a large wall plaque explaining the award and listing all the recipients which is installed in the Memorial Union.

High-risk Students Adjust

Last year's pilot program to aid 160 high-risk students was such a success that it is being continued during 1969-70.

The term, "high-risk," means that, according to past academic performance, the students were expected to have a greater amount of difficulty in staying in school. There were wide variations between many of the students' rank in their graduating high school classes and their scores on the national norms of a college aptitude test.

For instance, 57 per cent of these students were graduated in the top-third of their high school classes, but only 11 per cent placed in the top third of the aptitude test scores.

Ninety-seven per cent were in the top two-thirds of their graduating classes. On the college aptitude test, however, only 31 per cent placed that high.

The program was developed through the cooperation of the Financial Aids Office, the Testing and Counseling Center and the associate deans of the various campus divisions that admit freshmen.

Upperclassmen were made available to assist the 50 freshmen in a wide range of problems — academic, personal and bits-and-pieces information such as, "Where can I get used books?"

Throughout the program, the emphasis was on the adjustment to the university. How to study, how to organize one's time, how to outline, what to watch for in examinations, and similar problems were solved by the new students with the help of their student assistants. Many received no actual tutoring during the semester as they had little trouble with grades.

If any large problems — beyond the ability of the student assistant—developed, the freshman was referred to the Testing and Counseling Service.

The results indicate that the effort paid off. Eighty-five per cent of the freshmen in the pilot program had grades which were substantially better than their earlier aptitude test scores had predicted.

Fire Damages Greek House

Fire caused an estimated $100,000 damage to the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity house on College Avenue last month. The 12 men living in the structure at the time of the early morning blaze escaped uninjured.

Much of the first floor of the three-story house fell through to the basement, and there was heavy smoke and water damage to the upper floors of the building.

Fifty-six men were scheduled to live in the house this fall.

Campus Veterans Organize

The Missouri Collegiate Association, an organization designed to serve the 800 military veterans on campus, was formed shortly before the fall semester began.

Dale Kindred, one of the founders of the group, said its purpose would be both social and political. The organization would seek benefits for veterans on campus, he said, while also maintaining a social program.

Personal Membership Drive To Be Conducted in State

An ambitious membership drive in which every non-member of the Alumni Association who lives in out-state Missouri will be contacted personally, was announced by Membership Chairman Lloyd Turner, of Chillicothe, last month to the Board of Directors.

In addition to the personal solicitation, specialized mailings will be used in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Springfield. And there will be a divisional membership approach, as well as one general direct mail appeal.

"We're hoping the campaign brings in 6000 to 8000 new members," Turner said.

Joint Seminars Planned

A series of 27 seminars for civic leaders and legislators throughout Missouri will be sponsored this fall as a joint venture of the alumni associations from the four campuses of the University.

"The University is aware that it — and higher education in general — has lost some favor with Missourians during the past two or three years," said G. H. Entsminger, vice president for University Development. "We feel that this is due in great measure to a lack of hard information about the University of Missouri and the services it performs."

Entsminger said the seminars not only would enable alumni and state leaders to obtain more information about the University, its services, organization, and educational mission, but also would provide a forum for open discussion between the leaders and the office of the president.

"The seminars purposely are being kept small — about 25 persons — so real two-way communication is possible," Entsminger said.

The seminars, to be held between November 1 and December 15, will include three in St. Louis and two in Kansas City.

Housing Shortage Forces Students to Daniel Boone

Thirty-eight women students are living in the Daniel Boone Hotel this semester and some 110 others who had also applied for University housing are living in private rooms and apartments because of a room shortage.

Although freshmen women normally are not allowed to live in unsupervised housing, those on the waiting list were permitted to do so with parental permission.

Harold Condra, director of housing, had informed those students still on the waiting lists by early September that housing was available at the Daniel Boone, Mark Twain Residence Hall, and Columbia Terrace Apartments. Costs at Mark Twain run from $1400 to $1490 for the academic year for room and board; at Columbia Terrace, $600 per academic year for rooms; and at Daniel Boone $40 to $50 a month for rooms.

The University charges $850 per academic year for room and meals. Space is available for 6370 students.

Meanwhile, at Stephens College, some 50 girls are living in the Tiger Hotel.

Student Appearance Found Pleasing by Board Members

John Pollitt, of Santa Barbara, California, and Red Graham, of Westport, Connecticut, were happily surprised when they returned to the Columbia campus last month for the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association.

Pollitt, who represents the Far Western Region, and Graham, who represents the East, both were impressed with the appearance of the Missouri student.

"I've been on 15 Eastern campuses during the past year," said Graham, an IBM executive, "and you just wouldn't believe it. Somebody is doing something right here."

Alumni Loan Aids Co-op

Templecrone, one of the oldest student co-operatives on campus, has moved into a new home at 1404 University Avenue with the help of a $5000 loan from the Alumni Association.

The University owned the old Templecrone house at 701 Hitt and needed it for other purposes. When Templecrone was unable to come up with enough down payment for another home, the Alumni Association came through with the loan.

To Honor Gwinn Henry

Football players and trackmen who were members of the late Gwinn Henry's Missouri teams will gather in Columbia November 8 to help honor the memory of their former coach, who will be made a member of the Missouri Sports Hall of Fame, posthumously.

Involved are players from the years 1923 to 1931. Also scheduled for that weekend is a reunion of the Tiger football teams of 1919-21. During that time, the Tigers compiled a record of 18-4-2. The reunion will be held in conjunction with the annual M-Men's luncheon.

On the afternoon of November 8, the 1969 Missouri gridders meet Oklahoma.

Want Alumnus Added To Committee on Athletics

A plan to add an alumni member to the Committee on the Inter-collegiate Athletics on the Columbia campus has been unanimously endorsed by the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

The only University committee with alumni membership, the athletic governing group is now composed of five faculty members and two alumni. Originally, there were three faculty and two alumni. The new plan would increase the alumni membership to three.

Chancellor Schwada Names Ethnic Minority Committee

A new ad hoc committee, ethnic minority studies, was among the campus-wide committees for this school year announced by Chancellor John W. Schwada.

The committee is charged "with studying and reviewing the concerns of ethnic minorities on campus," the chancellor said, "and the development of academic programs to reflect the history and cultural contributions of ethnic minority groups."

Special Education Grant

Additional funds have been made available to help train personnel to fill the gap between the number of people needed to work with the handicapped and those currently available.

The U.S. Office of Education added $26,500 to a grant awarded earlier this year in the area of special education.

The recently-awarded funds will be used in developing programs for the mentally retarded, emotionally disturbed, and those with other learning disabilities.

New Approach for Physics

A $16,203 National Science Foundation grant to the University will be used to help introduce the modern approach to physics to high school teachers.

Assistant professor of science education, Dr. John B. Leake, held a conference in late August to explain the new curriculum to physics and physical science teachers.

The curriculum, known as the Harvard project-physics, will place more emphasis on philosophy and history instead of mathematics in the approach to physics.

MacLean Edits Papers

A series of papers, titled Community College Student Personnel Work, have been edited by Assistant Dean of Students Dr. L. Sandy MacLean, also assistant professor of education.

Participants in the 1967-68 NDEA Institute for Advanced Study in Student Personnel Work wrote the series of papers about the area of junior college and technical institute college personnel work. The papers were a two hour institute credit course, taught by MacLean in the College of Education.

The Educational Resources Information Center of Los Angeles, a major abstract agency for college student personnel publications, has accepted the work for its library.

Plans Made for Aides

A relatively new concept in teaching, the teacher aide, is undergoing study financed by a federal grant to the University.

A survey will be conducted by a graduate student to determine selected administrative problems regarding the teacher aides, non-certified persons hired to supplement a teacher's workload.

After the survey is conducted by questionnaire and interviews with administrators, aides and teachers, administrative guidelines will be outlined to assist the public school personnel in areas such as proper selection, salary and discipline problems in the classroom.

Under the direction of Dr. Frank Heagerty, professor of education and director of the College's Laboratory School, the $5318 grant extends from July through December.

Revolution, American Style

Blacks are fighting an "American-style" peaceful revolution, Dr. A. E. Strickland, instructor of the Columbia campus's new Negro history course, said in an interview with the Columbia Missourian.

Dr. Strickland, formerly at Chicago State College, is the first full-time Negro instructor this fall in the history department. He is teaching one of the first Negro history courses in the state, besides those at Lincoln University, Jefferson City.

Born and reared in Mississippi, Strickland received his PhD from the University of Illinois in 1962 and has since been at Chicago State College.

The course emphasizes the history of the 20th century Negro beginning with the reconstruction period to current events.

"There is nothing radical about radical reconstruction," Strickland says. "Think about economics; there were really no basic changes as far as the black man was concerned."

The black man received no land distributions nor was there any effort to help him get back on his feet. In reality, there were actually no foundations for freedom, he says.

The coming of "Black Power" in the 1960's is analogous to many internal revolutions in American history. Like the advent of the labor unions, one must see it is difficult to remake society without hurting feelings, Strickland says.

Strickland feels the course will be a start in reevaluating the place and role of the black man in U. S. history.

Aid for Library Resources

A federal grant to the library on the Columbia campus will help expand the University's resources of books, microfilm and other materials.

Dean Ralph H. Parker said the $48,391 grant is without restrictions other than requirements that it be matched partly with other funds.

Budget Totals $69.9 Million

The Columbia campus is operating on a budget of $69.9 million for fiscal 1969-70, up some $6.1 million, or 10 per cent, over the 1968-69 total. The Columbia campus figure includes a Medical Center allotment of $12.3 million.

The University-wide budget is $160.9 million, compared to $146.6 million a year earlier. Of this year's total, state appropriations accounted for $80.7 million, about half.

President John C. Weaver explained that the increase in the 1969-70 budget results primarily from the $7.6 million in additional funds appropriated to the University by the General Assembly, and an estimated $4.2 million from the recently-announced increase in student incidental fees and non-resident tuition beginning with the 1969 fall term.

But even with the increase in student fees, President Weaver said the budget falls more than $10 million short of what the University requested. He said the increase in the budget will be used mainly to accommodate projected enrollment increases, to help meet the rising costs of living, and for limited improvement of some existing programs. However, the budget is not sufficient to provide for any new programs.

The general operating budgets for the other three campuses are:

Rolla: $12.5 million, up $1.5 million or about 14 per cent from a year ago.

Kansas City: $16.5 million, a rise of $2.5 million or about 16 per cent over the 1968-69 budget.

St. Louis: $8.9 million, an increase of $1.3 million or about 16 per cent over a year ago.

The general operating budget also includes $10.5 million for University-wide operations, an increase of about 11 per cent from a year ago. In addition, $4.3 million is included in general operations for special programs, quality improvement through new techniques, faculty improvement, library improvements and the purchase of new and replacement of obsolete scientific teaching and research equipment.

Restricted operations in the budget amount to $38 million and include such activities as outside sponsored research; other sponsored programs; scholarships and fellowships; and auxiliary enterprises.

New Education Fraternity

A chapter of Phi Epsilon Kappa, men's national physical education fraternity, was recently installed on the Columbia campus.

With the help of three University faculty members who belong to the fraternity, 43 men were initiated into the chapter.

Language Problems Studied

During a two-day conference on the Columbia campus this summer, language problems of the culturally different or disadvantaged were analyzed.

As Mrs. of the College of Education's program of Continuing Professional Education, the "Conference on Language Learning Disabilities Among the Culturally Different" featured discussion on specific characteristics that influence the academic performance of such children.
