MEDICAL EDITION

The current long-hair. . . . trend among the younger generation is not revolutionary, but a "renaissance," according to a New York labor arbitrator, because "longer hair is the traditional mode for men while short hair has historically been the exception."

As reported in the New York Times, the arbitrator, Theodore W. Kheel, made the statement in a decision in which he ruled that New York City bus drivers could wear beards and sideburns.

Among the points made:

"All over the world, flowing beards have stood for wisdom, strength and fatherliness.

"In the early civilizations of the Mediterranean, the great men of the mind were all bearded: Abraham, Moses, Jesus, Aristotle, Plato.

"In fiction and folklore, this tradition has been carried over to such varied characters as King Arthur, Father Time and Santa Claus.

"When artists have drawn the face of God, it has often been with a flowing, white beard. The creator was painted this way by Michelangelo in the Sistine chapel.

"Uncle Sam is always drawn with a mustache and a little goat-like chin beard."

He didn't mention Blackbeard the Pirate.

ROACH TO MEDICAL EDUCATION

self-education in order to keep up with rapidly expanding medical knowledge

After more than three years of planning by the School of Medicine — and some $2 million of state and federal funds — the realities faced by today's practicing physicians are helping to shape a new approach in the preparation of tomorrow's doctors.

"When we looked at the typical practicing physician and his approach to everyday medical problems, we began to see that the Medical School curriculum had not really prepared the student for dealing effectively with some important aspects of the 'real' world," Dr. Donald A. Senhauser, chairman of the Medical School education committee, said.

"For instance," he said, "the emphasis had been primarily on the acquisition of facts with little effort to show him how to integrate and utilize those facts to solve a medical problem. His role was primarily as a passive receiver of information, rather than an active participant in his own education. He, therefore, failed to develop the habits of self-education which are so necessary to a physician in this era of rapidly expanding knowledge."

In addition, the practicing physician had never been formally shown the interrelationships between the basic sciences and his clinical work during the first two years of medical school. It was not until the third and fourth years that the new M. D. put the fragments of medical knowledge he had acquired into a meaningful package as he treated patients.

The laboratory where Clyde Watson (left) and Jeff Waters dissect a specimen, is open 24 hours a day and contains study carrels.

In trying to bring these realities of the practicing physician more in line with the teaching of the medical student, the School of Medicine settled on a relatively new approach now centered in the recent three-story addition to the medical center complex.

Here special laboratories have been constructed to provide each of the 200 first and second-year medical students with his own private study area immediately adjacent to laboratory benches and special facilities for closed-circuit television presentations, a unique "dial-a-lecture" telephone system, and space for the use of an array of auto-tutorial equipment.

Noting that the Columbia campus's Medical School is one of only 16 of the more than 100 in the country that have developed these types of labs, Dr. Senhauser said "this is a major change in the instruction of medical students. We're beginning to put the mass of information each student must master into an overall meaningful package."

Today at the Medical Center each first year student is learning at his own individual rate as he takes a specially programmed course in medical statistics. The entire course is taught by the use of a simply-computerized instructional machine.

"Everyone learns best when he establishes his own need to know," Dr. Senhauser said, "and that might be at 10:30 p.m. at night."

Whatever time it might be (the new labs are open 24 hours each day) the student will soon be able to pick up the phone adjacent to his study area to clarify the lecture he may have heard earlier in the day or a lecture he heard two weeks before. By simply dialing a special number the student will be hooked into a computerized bank of tape-recorded lectures. Anytime — day or night — the student may "dial-a-lecture" to get help on his particular problem.

Through the rapidly expanding activities of the newly developed Learning Center of the Educational Resources Group, headed by Dr. Merlyn Herrick, more than 20 specially prepared slide and tape instructional messages are now available to each student. Covering a variety of topics ranging from a "how-to-do-it" program on the "Determination of Bleeding and Clotting Time" to a straight lecture on "Diseases of the Anterior Pituitary" — the sight and sound presentations can be used with ear-phones at the students' lab study desks or in carrels at the Learning Center.

Closed-circuit television facilities for each lab, expected to be in use by mid-summer 1970, will provide an additional learning tool. Whereas the traditional lecture/demonstrations could be viewed by only a relatively small number of students, future demonstrations in the labs will have an unlimited potential for close-range viewing via the television eye.

"With the emphasis on self-learning, the entire psychology of teaching is reversed," Senhauser said. "The student is learning more on his own motivation and less on the basis of someone else's desires. With the new labs we try to teach the young physician to keep up with current medical developments. We realize that within five years after graduation, much of what the new doctor was taught will be outdated."

Although the advantages of the new labs tend to emphasize the benefits to students, the faculty, too, is finding advantages in the use of the labs. By fully utilizing the labs professors can concentrate more on the content of presentations and less on the logistics of presenting a demonstration or setting up a lab display. The logistics of ordering equipment and supplies for all the student labs is now handled almost entirely by the lab technical staff, a separate department in itself.

Already the labs have had an effect in re-orienting some courses away from a strictly departmental approach to teaching medicine. The emphasis now is on the interrelationships of the various systems of the body — the biochemistry, physiology, or the anatomy — regarding a particular medical problem.

Of all the types of student laboratories instituted in medical schools throughout the country, Dr. Senhauser feels that the new labs in use at Missouri are the most flexible to cope with curriculum changes which will undoubtedly occur during the lifetime of any building.

And he added: "This aspect of flexibility is important because it is quite amazing how walls and spatial arrangements, rather than ideas, dictate what may happen within an institution . . . Love-lace's 'Stone walls do not a prison make . . .' to the contrary."

"No medical school being planned for the future," Dr. Senhauser said, "would think of building student labs without basing them on the multi-disciplinary approach similar to those we have used." □

Employment Agency Aims At Bridging Racial Gap

Reprinted from an article in the Kansas City Star

Although the major drive in the last two to three years here and throughout the nation has been to train and employ disadvantaged and poorly educated minorities, mainly Negroes, little or nothing has been done to find jobs for educated Negroes.

With that in mind, SAMUEL W. WATSON, ME '67, a Negro and native Kansas Citian with two college degrees, last year opened Ebony Employment Specialists, aimed specifically at finding jobs for both college and high school graduates.

Since February, 1968, when he launched the enterprise with offices in the Professional building, he has placed many job-qualified Negroes. He also has launched a tremendous contact campaign to acquaint the business and industrial leaders of Greater Kansas City with what he has to offer. In addition to contacting about 600 firms by mail, he has held conferences with the personnel directors of 50 of the largest firms and conducted seminars with others.

The idea of finding jobs for educated and qualified Negroes is somewhat new nationally. Watson's company is the only one of its kind in the Middle West and there are only eight throughout the nation, most of them in the East, he said.

"My firm aims at getting jobs for Negroes in the so-called white collar category," Watson said. "Kansas City has fewer Negro white collar workers than most of the larger cities in the South. Less than 3 per cent of all white collar positions in the Kansas City area are held by black workers, and most of these are women."

Watson has been concentrating on major job classifications such as business administration, engineering, mathematics and sales and marketing for Negro males and several categories for Negro females.

"Many companies are looking for the educated and qualified Negroes in the white collar categories," he said, "but they may not know where to get them. Likewise, many Negro college graduates, having met rebuffs and prejudice in seeking jobs, are hesitant to walk into a large firm and ask a white personnel director for a job. That is what I am trying to do — bridge that gap and bring them together."

BOOKS

Ford
Booton Herndon, Arts '37

Subtitled "An Unconventional Biography of the Men and Their Times," Herndon's book focuses on Henry Ford II and his grandfather as well as talented managerial people throughout the years. Published by Weybright and Talley, Ford investigates the fortunes of the automotive company from its founding to the present.

Missouri's Struggle for Statehood

This is a reissue of the 1916 history of the same title. Shoemaker's book was the first reliable history of how Missouri became a state. It has been acclaimed for its thoroughness and scholarship, and uses relatively few secondary works. Private and public manuscripts, laws, constitutions, journals of legislative bodies and constitutional conventions, memoirs and newspapers comprise most of his sources. The publisher is Russell and Russell.

The Politics of the Bench and the Bar
Richard A. Watson, Professor of Political Science, and Rondal G. Downing, Associate Professor of Political Science and director of Public Affairs Program of its Research Center

This is an intensive examination of the Missouri Nonpartisan Court Plan based upon personal interviews with over 200 lawyers, judges, laymen and political figures in the state, a sample survey of over 1200 members of the Missouri Bar, court decisions, bar polls, and judicial elections. It is published by John Wiley and Sons, Inc.

Let's Write a Feature
G. Thomas Duffy, Associate Professor of Journalism

This 90-page book covers the fundamentals of feature writing, including grammar, interview techniques, research, outlining, leads and endings, transition, word choice, outlines and specialized writing.

The text's writing examples and dialogue between Duffy and his students are taken from his experience as a professor of feature writing and basic and advanced reporting courses.

Economic Problems and Policies
Dr. John M. Kuhlman, Professor of Economics

Published by Goodyear Publishing Co., this 340-page volume presents the basic tools of economic analysis, plus a collection of readings showing how economists use these tools. The book includes examinations of national incomes, supply and demand, and the basic operation of the banking system as well as the fundamental theory underlying trade and finance.

Modern Mink Management
A. H. Leonard, BS Agr '32

Ralston Purina has published this book which contains information on mink history and the management of mink ranches, as well as facts on research and disease control.

The Science of Animals that Serve Mankind
John R. Campbell, BS Agr '55, MS '56, PhD '60, Professor of Dairy Husbandry
John F. Lasley, BS '39, AM '40, PhD '43, Professor of Animal Husbandry

This text is the first and only introductory animal science text which presents the subject matter entirely from the principles of biological science aspect. Frequent reference is made to recent research and examples explain the principals presented. The volume is designed to provide the student with a better understanding of animal genetics, anatomy, physiology, nutrition and animal diseases which are of special importance to man. The publisher is McGraw-Hill.

Punjab History in Printed British Documents
Dr. N. Gerald Barrier, Associate Professor of South Asian History

A systematic discussion of Punjab parliamentary papers and official documents which gives Asian scholars an annotated bibliography of the printed record of the Punjab.

Paracelsus, Monarch of Medicine
Andrew Susac, AB '48

This book written for children in grades seven through nine, deals with Paracelsus, a biochemist, surgeon, physician, magician, alchemist, and one of the first men to translate the folk lore and witchcraft of the past into modern medical science. In his search for truth during the 16th century, Paracelsus was ridiculed, taunted, exiled, and even today is widely misunderstood. Doubleday published the biography.

LETTERS

To the editor:

The short article on page 29 with the headline "Student Appearance Found Pleasing by Board Members" leaves me cold. What is being done "right" at Missouri in regard to student appearance? Or why is that of any importance? I thought the right thing to be done at educational institutions was to educate.

Are there oppressive rules at Missouri requiring certain dress, hair cuts, shaves, etc.? Some people feel that the outward signs of a rebellious youth are refreshing, that students should have a say in their own destiny and that if the institutions insist on preventing students from getting in on some decision making, it is the institution that is at fault.

I would hope that by now you might get an article from the SDS, or from some other radical organization, to counter the one you ran by the Missouri Congressman. This is not to support SDS or the congressman; it is giving a hearing and that is fair.

Who Got the Tickets?

Tickets to the 1970 Orange Bowl were hard to come by — at least in Columbia, Missouri. The Athletic Department's allotment of 12,500 soon was gone, leaving thousands of alumni and season ticket holders asking, "What happened?"

To begin with, the demand was unprecedented and unexpected. Where the Athletic Department had sold 4000 tickets last year to the Gator Bowl, 6000 Sugar Bowl tickets in 1965, and 9000 Orange Bowl tickets in 1960, this year there were requests for more than 20,000 tickets.

Now, the Orange Bowl seats something over 75,000 persons; the NCAA provides that the two participating schools must be given access to a third of the total — 12,500 each; so there were more than 62,500 Orange Bowl tickets that Missouri had nothing to do with. But here's the way Missouri's 12,500 were expended:

Students purchased 4500. College football still is a student activity on the Columbia campus, and students were given an early shot at the tickets. They responded in record numbers.

The Big Eight Conference purchased 1000 tickets. These were for the use of the conference office and the athletic department officials of the other seven conference schools.

There were 750 tickets given by the Athletic Department to various official parties. Each member of the football squad received from one to four of these per NCAA regulations. Immediate families of the football staff were in this category. Others included the governor of the state, members of the Board of Curators, the President of the University, the Chancellor of the Columbia campus, members of the Athletic Committee, and members of the news media.

Another 1000 tickets were purchased by members of some of the above groups — largely the Curators (mostly for redistribution), state legislators, news media, and faculty members on the Athletic Committee.

The Missouri football coaching staff and football squad were allowed to purchase an additional 1500 tickets. Each member of the squad could buy up to eight; each assistant coach, up to 50. Many of these were used for parents and other relatives of the players. Many others went to persons who help in the football program — recruiting, providing summer jobs for players, and the like.

Three hundred tickets were purchased by three travel agencies — two in Columbia and one in St. Louis. These three reportedly had been receiving such allotments for Missouri bowl trips since 1949.

The Alumni Association purchased 1000 tickets to provide for the air tour and ground package sponsored by the organization.

That left fewer than 2500 tickets for faculty, season ticket holders, financial contributors to the Athletic Department, and the general public. They were gone so quickly after the tickets were placed on sale that the Athletic Department made no general ticket order mailing to season ticket holders. In fact, as it turned out, if the season-ticket holder was not also a contributor to the athletic fund, he probably did not get a ticket.

The Alumni Association ordered its 1000 tickets at the earliest possible minute, on the theory that it did little good to offer a tour to the Orange Bowl without the ticket, too. No one, of course, predicted the terrific onslaught on tickets, and the Association staff assumed that Alumni Association members not going on the tour would be able to obtain tickets from the Athletic Department, as they had for the past bowls. Unfortunately, this was not always the case. Of the Association's 1000 tickets, 568 were used by persons taking the full air tours from St. Louis, Kansas City, or Columbia, and most of the rest by members who provided their own transportation to Miami, but relied on Association-obtained rooms. (For last year's Gator Bowl tour, the Association sold more than 400 land-only packages, and ordered its tickets based on last year's experience). The Association's few remaining tickets were sold to Association members living in the Miami area (tickets were impossible to come by there, too), to Alumni Association board members who had their own transportation to and accommodations in Miami, and on a first-come, first-serve basis. All of the Association's 1000 tickets, incidentally, were located in the Orange Bowl from the goal line back.

There were, of course, many disappointed — and several irate — persons who did not get tickets. There is no doubt that some tickets from Missouri's allotment later were scalped, although these cases seemed to be relatively few. One member of the Athletic Department staff wryly remarked that the ticket experience had been "unreal, but educational."

If nothing else, requests for 20,000 tickets — largely by Missourians — to the Orange Bowl in Miami — which is not exactly Economy Avenue USA — says something about affluence in the old home state.

People are talking about the University

If there is any generalization possible about the first group of 18 University Seminars held throughout the state last fall, it is that the Missouri citizen has more questions about the faculty than about students, or even the size of the University of Missouri budget.

President John C. Weaver and the five other members of the University-wide staff who toured the state served as a sounding board for a great variety of questions about the University. They were glad to hear them, because that really was the purpose of the seminars, sponsored jointly by the alumni associations of the four campuses.

"We were there to listen," explained President Weaver, "and we learned considerably about the legitimate concerns of the people of Missouri in relation to their state university."

Most of the seminars were limited to 25 or so persons in order that a true open-forum type of format could be maintained. Guests included various civic leaders, as well as state legislators in the area.

Almost without exception, those attending the seminars reacted positively to the two-way discussion idea (one person remarked that he was happily surprised that it just wasn't another pitch for funds). And the administrators were pleased to find the strong reservoir of support for the University throughout the state, both in the areas of financing and in its educational mission. There was a great deal of pride expressed in the good behavior of University students.

But friends also can have sincere doubts, and there were more than 200 questions tossed at Weaver and the other administrators—A.G. Unklesbay, vice president for administration; Vernon E. Wilson, vice president for academic affairs; C. B. Ratchford, vice president for extension; G.H. Entsminger, vice president for development; and Stirling Kyd, assistant to the president.

So in Wentzville, Marshall, Poplar Bluff, Rolla, Jefferson City, Mexico, Kirksville, Flat River, Hannibal, Cape Girardeau, Warrensburg, Cabool, St. Joseph, Liberty, Hillsboro, Nevada, Kansas City, and Independence, here are some of the questions they asked (friends in St. Louis, Chillicothe, Springfield, Joplin, and perhaps two or three other places will get their chance later this winter):

How much time do faculty members spend in actual teaching, and how much on research?

How many freshmen flunk out of the University?

How does the transfer of credits work among the four campuses?

Is the University too big?

How do you get rid of unwanted faculty members? Just what is tenure?

What are the rules about academic freedom?

Is out-of-state tuition high enough to pay the cost of educating those students?

How can you justify the time and expense devoted to football?

Are Missouri's entrance requirements too low?

Is there any control over the length of freshmen hair?

Is agriculture being slighted in the current extension programs?

Do the University's fund-raising efforts conflict with private schools?

Is there duplication of academic programs on the various campuses?

Why not eliminate all freshmen and sophomore classes from Columbia?

Why does the University own a commercial television station?

Are teachers evaluated by the extent of their publishing efforts?

Is the student advisement, counseling system as efficient as it should be?

Are there double standards for black students?

Are there plans for a law school on the St. Louis campus?

What's the proper role of the Commission on Higher Education?

What's the relationship between the University and junior colleges?

Do the news media do an accurate job in reporting student unrest?

Does student unrest stem from the teaching of some professors in the classroom?

Why not raise the tuition again to get the necessary funds for the University?

Why not push a bond issue for capital improvements in the state?

How does the University handle radical speakers who visit the campuses?

Does the state really need a medical school in Kansas City?

How many draft dodgers and "career" students are there at the University?

Are students from outstate Missouri at a disadvantage in competing with graduates from suburban and urban high schools?

Is the Columbia campus headed toward being a complex of graduate schools only?

Who gets all the parking privileges around the campuses, particularly at Columbia?

How many professors did not hold classes during the moratorium?

How much racial tension is on campus?

Why was Adam Clayton Powell invited to speak at the University?

How much money is paid to professors from federal grants?

Does the University suffer from empire building on the part of some departments?

What proportion of the actual cost of his education does the Missouri student pay?

What is the University doing for business?

How much effort are University professors making in encouraging the free-enterprise concept among students?

How many doctor graduates from the Medical School on the Columbia campus remain in Missouri?

Has an enrollment-cutoff figure been established for any of the campuses?

From time to time, the Alumnus will attempt to answer some of the above questions for the benefit of all Association members. Stories are scheduled on the broad, faculty subject of academic freedom, teaching vs. research, and tenure, and on the beginning-student subject of the University's admission policies, counseling, and the flunk-out rate.

If readers would like answers to specific questions concerning the University, write the Alumnus. Your letter and the answer to the question will appear in the magazine.

Alumnae Fund Will Honor Superior Faculty Woman

An outstanding woman member of the University of Missouri-Columbia faculty will receive a $500 award in 1970 from the newly-established Alumnae Anniversary Fund for Recognition of Faculty Women.

Announcement of the annual award followed a recent joint meeting of the Alumnae Fund committee and representatives of 23 women's organizations on the campus.

The award will be made to a faculty woman chosen by the committee for her noteworthy contribution to the education of women.

Committee members who initiated the award are: Miss Ruby J. Cline, Columbia, chairman, BS '19, professor emerita of physical education; Mrs. Thomas D. Graham, Jefferson City, AB '44 and first alumnae member of the Development Fund board of directors; Dr. Lois Knowles, BS, AM '31, EdD '41, professor of education; Dr. Margaret Mangel, director of the School of Home Economics; Mrs. Gladys Pihlblad, director of student affairs for women; Dr. Ruby Potter, director of the School of Nursing; Mrs. Irene Taylor, Columbia, BJ '24; and Judy Stewart, Columbia, a junior in the College of Arts and Science, student liaison to the committee and one of two student members of the Development Fund Board of Directors.

Women students will join alumnae in selecting the candidates for the honor. The students will also help the committee in its annual solicitation, to be launched February 18, approximate date of the University's founding in 1839. Contributions to the Alumnae Anniversary Fund are being solicited in multiples of 131 — $1.31, $13.10, $131, $1310 — marking the 131st anniversary of the University.

Conduct Code Is Revised

The Board of Curators of the University has reworded and expanded the previous Standard of Student Conduct in order to clarify the rules.

Misconduct for which students are subject to discipline falls into the following categories:

"Dishonesty, such as cheating, plagiarism, or knowingly furnishing false information to the University.

"Forgery, alteration, or misuse of University documents, records, or identification.

"Obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary procedures, or other University activities, including its public service functions, or of other authorized activities on University premises.

"Physical abuse of any person on University-owned or controlled property or at University-sponsored or supervised functions, or conduct which threatens or endangers the health or safety of any such person.

"Theft of or damage to property of the University or of a member of the University community or campus visitor.

"Unauthorized entry to or use of University facilities.

"Violation of University policies or of campus regulations, including campus regulations concerning the registration of student organizations, the use of University facilities, or the time, place and manner of public expression.

"Use, possession or distribution of narcotic or dangerous drugs, such as marijuana and lysergic acid diethylamid (LSD), except as expressly permitted by law.

"Violation of rules governing residence in University-owned or controlled property.

"Disorderly conduct or lewd, indecent, or obscene conduct or expression on University-owned or controlled property or at University-sponsored or supervised functions.

"Failure to comply with directions of University officials acting in the performance of their duties.

"Conduct which adversely affects the student's suitability as a member of the academic community."

Pledge Contracts Issued

The Interfraternity Council, representing 29 fraternities on the Columbia campus, has initiated a contract with their pledges guaranteeing the fraternity's assistance to the pledges.

The Pledge Education Contract states that the members recognize "the importance of constructive pledge education practices to a wholesome fraternity environment."

A copy of the contract will be hung in a prominent position in each house, listing the contract's ten sections specifically outlining the fraternity's obligations to its pledges. The obligations include a regular amount of study time each evening, quiet hours and a statement saying any infractions brought to the attention of the IFC court will be tried on the basis of signed written statements and testimony.

President of the Council, Randy Hendricks, stated, "It is time for the fraternities to make a stand. We have to let the public know we are making big changes in the Greek system on campus. The emphasis today in the fraternity is on achievement — scholastic and leadership — not necessarily social. Our pledges are students first above all else."

THE COLUMNS AND...

Economy to Continue Rise

Dr. Robert W. Paterson, professor of economics at the University, has made his annual forecast of national economic conditions.

According to his article, "The 1970 U.S. Economy," published in the current issue of Business and Government Review, our economy will continue to advance but inflation will also continue. Interest rates won't start to drop until the last half of the year, and the high price of short and long term credit will adversely affect the expansion of construction and capital goods industries.

Dr. Paterson's forecast is based on specific assumptions, both political and economic.

Draft Resistor Describes Experiences in Canada

While the Class Notes section of the Alumnus continually attests to the large number of graduates serving in Vietnam, one former Columbia student chose an alternative.

In December of 1968, a '67 graduate of the University with a BS in education made a crucial decision: to flee induction into the army by taking up residency in Canada. An account of his experiences by the former Missouri resident appeared in a recent issue of the student newspaper, The Maneater, in which he described the results of the decision which he made at the induction center.

"My final decision was the result of a combination of selfless and selfish motives: I couldn't wage war against a people for whom I felt nothing but sorrow and pity and I also owe myself too much to submit to the senseless degradation of the military.

"When I got out of the building I knew I was going to Canada and I was scared. But I felt good because I no longer felt like a gut-less wonder . . .

"I bought a ticket to Toronto and caught the plane from Lambert Field. From Chicago I called my parents and told them good-by. They supported me and wished me luck. I got the address of the anti-draft office in Chicago. An hour later I landed in Toronto.

"I was in a strange city, in a strange country, I had no clothes other than what I was wearing, it was 3 degrees outside, nighttime and I had $1.50. That night I stayed at the "Y" for free and the next day the anti-draft office cashed a check for me and found me a place to stay.

"The rest of the month I spent waiting for documents and looking for jobs. On January 4, I was accepted as an immigrant and the next day got a job as a substitute teacher. A week later I got my first call to teach and the first class, who asked me if I was a draft dodger (because of my American accent), applauded when I said yes. I knew then that I was going to like Canada.

"I've studied a lot about Canada now and have hitch-hiked through the country getting the feel of it. Canadians are good people, warm and sympathetic. They are accepting us just as they accepted the runaway slaves last century and the Loyalist refugees the century before that.

"It would make a more interesting story if I could say that we are an embittered group arming for the "Revolution" but for the majority the most overt political activity is helping others get settled when they arrive.

"Most of us agree that there will never be an amnesty because of the political psychology peculiar to Americans and most of us accept that. At first I hoped for amnesty but now I don't care much one way or the other.

"I want to live a meaningful life and raise children with minds free from political distortions.

"The most beautiful experience I've had since I've been here was the anti-war march on Easter Sunday. Among the 8000 marchers were Australians, New Zealanders, Vietnamese and Americans who had all refused to fight a senseless war. There was a great feeling of our common humanity in that group. And Canada accepts us all."

Alumnus Receives Award

The Missouri Alumnus recently received a Special Merit Award at the District VI meeting of the American Alumni Council. Colleges and universities from nine states participated.

There is no first place award given in the category. Other alumni magazines receiving Special Merit Awards were those of St. Louis University, the University of Denver, University of Iowa and University of Tulsa.

Med Center Needs Funds

Construction plans for a seven-story outpatient clinic and nurses' training and research area will be delayed unless the State Legislature approves approximately $4.1 million, Dr. William D. Mayer, dean of the School of Medicine, said in a speech in Jefferson City in December.

Nearly $4 million in federal funds were approved last April on the condition that the state first would provide 50 per cent of the costs of construction.

The present outpatient clinic treated 87,337 cases during the 1968 fiscal year, although it was built to accommodate only half that many people. If the addition were built, some 125,000 patients could be treated. The present clinic would then be remodeled to train medical students and resident physicians in the specialty of family practice, a program approved by the American Medical Association last spring.

If the proposed addition to house the School of Nursing were built, about 148 students and 28 graduate students could be accepted. This year only 85 students were accepted because of lack of space. Ninety-three applicants, 34 of whom were in the upper-fourth of their graduating class, had to be turned down. The University School of Nursing is the only state supported school in Missouri that has national accreditation.

Dedicate Hospital Annexes

Two additions to the Medical Center, a nine-bed clinical research center and the multidisciplinary student laboratories (see story in this issue), were dedicated in November.

The additions are located on opposite wings of the newly constructed sixth and seventh floors of the Medical Sciences Building. Principal speaker at the ceremony was Rep. William R. Hull Jr., who was introduced by Congressman Richard Ichord.

The clinical research center is being used to develop new means of treating a variety of disorders under carefully controlled conditions. Grants from the National Institutes of Health support costs of construction, equipment, staffing and operation of the center, as well as the cost of hospitalization for any patient agreeing to participate in the research.

Students' Cancer Research To Be Published In Book

A husband and wife, both second-year University medical students, will have their work on tumor secretion published as a chapter of a new book on cancer research.

Joanne and Harry Cornbleet, a young couple who were married this summer, have written a report on "Differences in Pharmacological Reactions between Normal and Tumor-Bearing Animals." It will appear as a chapter in a book by Dr. Waro Nakahara, director of the National Cancer Center Research Institute in Tokyo, formerly a researcher at the National Cancer Institute of the United States.

The Cornbleets' research grew out of a project in their biochemistry studies last year. They pursued the effects of a tumor extract, toxohormone, on drug-metabolizing enzymes and drug action. Toxohormone is thought to be responsible for depressing the liver catalase activity in cancer patients and tumor-bearing animals.

The Cornbleets' research seemed to indicate that alterations in pharmacological reactions in tumor-bearing animals may be caused by a tumor secretion, and that toxohormone may be specifically involved in this regard.

"But the real significance of this finding may lie more in the implications for future research," says Joanne. "For example, we might speculate on the role that depression of drug-metabolizing enzymes by toxohormone might play in tumor development or growth.

Dr. William D. Mayer, dean of the School of Medicine said, "Dr. Nakahara is a world renowned leader in cancer studies and to be invited to contribute a chapter to his book is an unusual honor for these students and for the Medical School."

Medical Lectures by Phone

Through a system of telephone lectures, doctors in 62 locations in Missouri have been able to continue their education without leaving their home bases.

The program, designed for doctors, nurses and professional workers in physical medicine and rehabilitation, is part of the Continuing Medical Education program of the Medical Center.

According to Gail Bank, executive director, at least 84 lectures will be given throughout the year on topics chosen from requests.

The lectures, presented by one or more professionals, are taped in advance. After the lecture, however, the speaker is available for questions via a special phone.

If a person is busy at the time of the lecture, he can still hear the entire lecture at his convenience later.

The lectures are not limited to the Missouri network system. Bank said an expert anywhere in the world, as long as he has an orthodox telephone, can lecture.

The program, which began over a year ago, is supported by a grant from the Missouri Regional Medical Program.

Field Stations Assigned To MU Nursing Students

Ten School of Nursing students have started eight weeks of field experience in community nursing with nursing services and health departments in rural Missouri.

Community nursing, required for all nursing students, includes limited nursing care in the homes of patients and families, as well as participation in community health programs in industries, nursing homes and the Missouri State Sanatorium. Students also attend class one day a week on the Columbia campus.

The students are supervised by the Missouri Division of Health and faculty members in the School. The student nurses are assigned to five Missouri counties.

Aural Program Initiated For Handicapped Children

Deaf and severely hard of hearing pre-school children are being aided by a teaching program recently initiated at the Columbia campus Medical Center.

Conducted by Dr. Robert Cozad, audiologist, and Miss Madelon Goetzinger, teacher of the deaf, the program is aimed at helping children learn language and speech. Initially, most of the children are expected to come from the central Missouri area for their free lessons at the Medical Center.

"Deaf and severely hard of hearing children are not dumb in the sense of the common expression 'deaf and dumb' — 'dumb' meaning not able to speak," Dr. Cozad said. "If at a very young age these aurally handicapped children are involved in a training program which teaches them language, speech, and the use of their residual hearing, they can develop speech and language like the normal hearing child."

Parents are an important part of this program for they are taught to work with their children at home. Miss Goetzinger has conducted lessons for these handicapped children in their homes in order to help parents in reinforcing and encouraging continual use of language and residual hearing.

The new program has been made possible by a grant from the Missouri Crippled Children's Service.

Information Science Field Draws on Many Disciplines

The emerging field of information science draws upon a number of disciplines, according to Donald A. B. Lindberg, professor of information science and chairman of that new Columbia campus department.

Among useful backgrounds are linguistics, management, and journalism, as well as library science, electrical engineering, computer science, medicine, statistics, and mathematics.

Projects in information retrieval deal with a system of medical diagnosis and with a union catalog for the libraries of the University's four campuses.

The tiger looks a little forlorn and dejected. After all, tigers don't like to be caged, and this one was—and the Tigers were. Nonetheless, Missouri alumni who made the Miami trip enjoyed the fun in the sun. They would have been happier, of course, if the Orange Bowl game had turned out differently, but they recognized that it had taken a heck of a season even to get there.
