SEPTEMBER 1960

VOL. XLIX, NO. 1

Mrs. Gundlach greeted at Seoul by Capt. Kim, Young Wee, commanding officer, Seewan Base; Little Kim, Bok Hee, war orphan adopted by her club; Col. Seh, Sang Yun, public information chief, Headquarters Office, ROKAF; and Capt. Yum, Ky. Suk, Kimpo Base.

When 'Mom' went to see her 'sons'

BACK IN MARCH 1955 A KOREAN ORPHAN GIRL, Kim, Bok Hee, then seven years old, was adopted by the Wives Club of the U. S. Corps of Engineers in Mobile, Alabama. Jessie Sherman Gundlach, wife of George C. Gundlach, is a member of that club, and the adoption set off a chain of events in international relations that have had Mrs. Gundlach deeply involved ever since. There was another step in the hands-across-the-sea saga which came a few years later; Mrs. Gundlach invited a young Korean Air Force officer, from nearby Keesler Field, to her home at Pass Christian, Miss., for coffee. The latest development in this growing circle of international friendship was Mrs. Gundlach's tour of Korea last spring to visit more than a score of ROK airmen who have known the hospitality of the Gundlach home, Chateau Sherman, since dubbed the Castle College of International Friendship by grateful "alumni" in Korea. Another purpose was to see Little Kim.

Mrs. Gundlach's trip was summarized by one of the alumni, Capt. Soong, Chang Hyun, as "a national celebration of gratitude for Mom, in gratitude for her deep love for us and our families; everyone in Korea wanted to show their personal appreciation."

Her "boys" were in personal escort groups wherever she stopped on her tour. Since September 1957 they had made the Gundlach home their weekend headquarters during their tour of duty at Keesler. Capt. Chang, Jin Dong was the first guest; when he returned he brought his friends, who in turn brought their friends. There are currently eight officers of the Korean Air Force stationed at Keesler, who bring the number of Castle College alumni up to about fifty.

On hand to greet Mrs. Gundlach at Kimpo Airport in Seoul were

At Headquarters Office of the Republic of Korea Air Force in Seoul, Mrs. Gundlach enjoys a bit of byplay with Gen. Shin, Yu Hyup, commanding officer of the ROKAF Academy; Col. Seh, Sang Yun; and Col. Lee, deputy officer of Communications and Electronics Bureau at the Academy.

Capt. Chang and another of her "sons," Lt. Yang, Syn Suk, who served as her personal escorts; also at the airport was the orphan girl, now 13. A round of welcoming ceremonies, widely heralded, began at once.

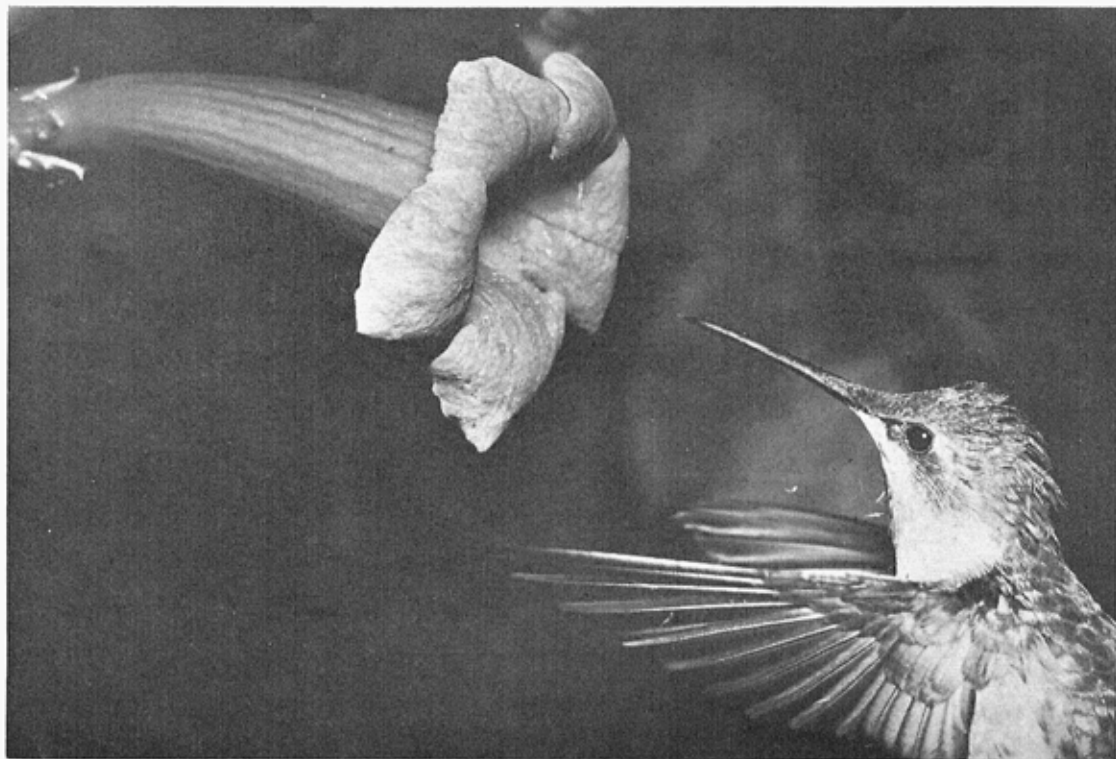

At the ROK Air Force headquarters, Mrs. Gundlach was presented a letter of appreciation from Gen. Kim, Chang Kyoo, chief of staff of the ROKAF. In the letter, Gen. Kim said, "You have demonstrated a maximum degree of humanity in giving personal assistance to the Korea Air Force officers, who received training at Keesler Air Base. Your deep interest to our Air Force has assisted immeasurably in the healthy growth of the Republic of Korea Air Force. In addition, your warm friendship and kindness in your relationship with the Korea Air Force personnel have further strengthened the existing friendly tie between the Republic of Korea Air Force and the people of the United States of America."

Mrs. Gundlach presented Gen. Kim a plaque representing the first contingent of officers to be alumni of Castle College. The plaque, bearing the names of 42 Oriental students, will hang on a wall of the ROKAF Academy.

During the stay in Seoul, Mrs. Gundlach planted yew trees, which she had brought from the grounds of her home in Pass Christian, at the Air Academy and at the orphanage home of Kim, Bok Kee. While making a tour of the Airway Communication Service Wing at Taegu, Mrs. Gundlach was proclaimed "Mom of the ROKAF." On another phase of her tour ROK army men also proclaimed her as their adopted "Mom." And so it went. She was guest of honor at receptions and dinners, including a dinner given by the chief of staff of the Korean Air Force, Gen. Kim. In Seoul she was presented a life membership in the Boy Scouts of Korea by the chief Scout executive; in Jakarta, Indonesia, she renewed acquaintance with Dr. Thio In Lang, one of her "sons" who is assistant professor of physiology at the University of Jakarta; at the Botanical Gardens of Indonesia an orchid was named "Mom Gundlach" in her honor. While visiting the cities in the various countries, Mrs. Gundlach would take buses around in order to meet the people and really see how they live. Wherever she went during her eleven days in Korea, the reunion with her "sons" was accompanied by honors and tributes, and the entire Korean tour was covered by the U. S. Information Service, the Stars and Stripes, and ROK and A.N.S. photographers. Her trip also included stops in Japan, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Saigon, Singapore. Everywhere the one-woman goodwill tour received royal treatment—in military, educational and government circles, and in homes.

As Mrs. Gundlach said, "A greater love could never have been shown any person than was shown me, in every foreign country to which I went to visit." And it all began with an invitation for a cup of coffee.

Straight-shooting entomologist

By Vivian Hansbrough

LEE JENKINS is no gun-toter, but some of his shots would put Western TV actors to shame. This camera-packin' professor brings 'em back alive—on film—to enjoy long after the hunter has lost the thrill of killing one of Nature's creatures.

Perhaps the story might have been different if his teachers had not used photographs of insects to illustrate their lectures in entomology when Lee was a freshman in the College of Agriculture. Already a camera fan, he was impressed by the unlimited possibilities of combining photography and entomology. His life since then has been dedicated to showing the story of entomology through pictures.

Repeating the cycle, students now enrolled in the first course in entomology again receive a fascinating introduction to the drama of the insect world, but this time it is Lee Jenkins, associate professor of entomology, who is projecting his own colored movies on a screen. There in front of their eyes are close-up enlargements in true-to-life colors of the larva of a lady beetle feeding on aphids, a spider eating a honeybee, parasitic wasps attached to the back of a hornworm, and a dragonfly laying eggs in water.

During the three decades he has been with the entomology department, Lee has built up a sizeable collection of colored slides of garden and orchard insects. County agents show duplicates of these slides to farm groups, so that farmers may learn to recognize common pests that infest crops. Lee also writes and illustrates bulletins on insect control, for distribution to farmers.

Nematodes, tiny threadworms which attack field and garden crops, are increasing to an alarming extent in the sandy soil of southeast Missouri. Lee Jenkins, one of the few nematologists in the United States, photographs the tiny nematodes under a microscopic lens to obtain slides for projection in the classroom and in farmers' meetings. He photographs roots of cotton, soybeans, and vegetables to show the type and the extent of damage.

All work and no play could make photography dull,

"Look, mister, you stay back there with your camera. These are MY eggs."

Subject matter for Lee Jenkins photographs ranges from Missouri's state flower, the hawthorn, to newly-emerged cecropia moth, to farmboys in a hayloft. Lee sighted the boys descending from the loft early one morning and asked them to pose. He arranged their feet, suggested one put a straw in his mouth, and snapped a picture which rated publication in a national photography magazine.

but Lee Jenkins has fun with his camera by taking it along on outdoor excursions. Each summer he spends part of his vacation on an island in the Mississippi River, near Clarksville. There he has photographed birds in a heron rookery consisting of some 200 nests of American egrets, great blue herons, and black-crowned night herons. To reach a nest, he nailed sections of willow poles to the sides of trees for handholds and hauled up cameras on a line. He says the pictures thus obtained were ample reward for both time and trouble. His bird slides in color are in great demand for club programs.

A visit to the zoo yields portraits of a lumbering rhinoceros or a playful panda. A trip into the woods produces pictures of a frisky squirrel, a sleepy owl, or bird eggs in a nest. Flowers appeal to Lee, particularly if a colorful butterfly flutters nearby. He photographs the downy puff of a dandelion and the star-shaped bloom of a cactus.

Autumn is typified in his picture of pumpkins stacked against a cornshock; summer, by a close-up shot of a farmboy drinking cool water from an up-turned jug. Clouds fascinate him, and he has captured some beautiful ones. Using infrared film, he photographed the Student Union tower against a halo of clouds; the resulting picture has been admired in numerous photo exhibits.

His favorite camera for insect photography is a 35-millimeter single-lens reflex Exakta, equipped with an electronic flash which automatically times the exposure at one-thousandth of a second. For indoor photography, he also uses a $2\frac{1}{4}'' \times 3\frac{1}{4}''$ press camera and prefers to do his own darkroom processing and enlarging.

Thus Lee Jenkins makes a happy combination of his work and his hobby, for his own pleasure as well as the instruction and entertainment of others.

Prized E. E. Building

"Best building on the campus" is the boast of many a student and faculty member about the University's new Electrical Engineering Building. Situated on South Sixth Street across from Lathrop Hall, the three-story building of red brick with cut limestone trim has the overall shape of a reversed L. The main part of the building has a 122-foot front and is 100 feet deep; at the south end is the auditorium wing, the structures joined by a spacious glass-enclosed lobby. Besides offices and classrooms, there are extensive laboratory and shop facilities, including: large general-power lab occupying nearly a third of the first floor; four general circuit-labs; a micro-wave, a control circuits, and illumination, and a distributed networks lab; three electronics and electronic-circuits labs; an analog computer, and a network analyzer lab; a general maintenance shop; an electronics shop; seven design-drafting rooms and an industrial engineering design room.

A visitor quickly gains the impression that here is an extremely well-planned building, as practical as it is attractive.

Briefs by Bus

Now and then some one asks why the Alumni Association doesn't sponsor special trains to various out of town football games and other University affairs.

The Alumni Association does not consider itself as being in the "travel agent" business, even though it is aware that it is common practice for persons or groups acting as travel agents to receive a certain percentage in return for favorable promotion. It has been suggested that the Alumni Association may as well have that percentage.

The University Alumni Association and its employed staff are interested in assisting individual alumni organizations in arranging group travel plans to and from University activities. It is not interested, however, in promoting the individual financial rewards. Whenever it officially sanctions an operation it is assured by the carrier involved that no agent's fee is being paid, or if there is a commission of some form, that fact will be advertised and made known to individual participants.

In the past the Association has felt it necessary to step into actual sponsorship to protect the alumni and the prestige of the Association. This has happened only twice in ten years. It is understandable that the name of the University of Missouri Alumni Association is desirable in order to lend a stamp of official sanction to a promotion, and on occasion the name has been applied to such promotion without the knowledge or consent of the Alumni Association or University officials.

Upon occasion the Association does work cooperatively with the carrier in helping to distribute material calling attention to special trip plans. The Association prefers to act only in a referral role—providing helpful information to alumni who might be interested. In this way it fills its proper role of servicing University and alumni interests while leaving the actual promotion and operation to the carrier or agency.

The Association is a service organization to the University; in this role it can make many more objective, tangible contributions to the University's welfare. This basic principle has guided policy on these activities in the past and have been emphatically emphasized by this year's President, Gordon Blackmore.

Here's an example of what can be accomplished by alumni who want to make a contribution to the welfare of their alma mater. It is the attractive new booklet, "Let's Look at Mizzou," a brief picture of some of the features of student life on the campus, and aimed at high school seniors.

The booklet was conceived by St. Louis alumni leaders, and the burden of the project was undertaken by members of the Missouri contingent in the D'Arcy Advertising Company. The skill of Marvin McQueen, George Stemmler and Larry Bartram, among others, shows up in this little book which should appeal to high school students and cause them to think of Mizzou as the place to continue their education.

In addition to the creative talent supplied by D'Arcy, production help came from two St. Louis firms: Von Hoffman, Press, Inc., and the Braznell Company, printing ink manufacturers.

The St. Louis Alumni Club, which rounded up the pictures for the booklet, plans to distribute it to Missouri high school principals.

Facts About Your Missouri U.

The teaching staff of the University, including the School of Mines and Metallurgy at Rolla, totals more than 1,000.

* * *

Last year the University had students from 49 states, from every county in Missouri, and from 47 other countries.

* * *

By offering a course in civil engineering in 1849, Missouri was the first institution in the west, and third in the Nation, to institute training distinctly in engineering.

* * *

The Columbia campus occupies more than 1,000 acres of land with almost 100 major buildings.

* * *

The University at Columbia embraces thirteen professional schools and colleges with ten major divisions; enrollment is approximately 10,000.

* * *

It is one of only four institutions in America where all these professional divisions are located on one campus, thus offering maximum diversity and well rounded curricular opportunities.

Your new Alumni Association president, Gordon Blackmore of Trenton, made an able presentation at the Summer Commencement Exercises. In his two-minute speech he welcomed the graduates into the ranks of Missouri alumni and urged their active participation in the Association.

"During the next several years," he said, "colleges and universities throughout the United States will be faced with an increasing number of complex and perplexing problems. In some instances these problems can be solved only by strong support from well informed voting citizens. Wherever you live, your friends and neighbors will expect you, as a University graduate, to be well informed. I know of no better way to avail yourself of information concerning these problems than through active membership in the University of Missouri Alumni Association."

missouri memo

That traveling man, C. F. (Toad) Wasser, '16 of 1521 Greenberry Road, Jefferson City, Mo., has settled down to getting his new house completed on the shore of Lake Taneycomo, Hollister, Mo., but he has taken time to write an account of the leisurely western and south-western trip he and Mrs. Wasser took a few months ago. Their schedule allowed for visits with many friends and relatives, including numerous alumni: In Kansas City the Wassers visited their daughter, Barbara Wasser Melchert, B.S. in Ed. '56, and her husband, Bruce Melchert, '56, now in law school at Kansas City U. In Oklahoma they were guests of Howard (Swede) Osborn of the Oklahoma Highway Department and Mrs. Osborn, the former Mary Elizabeth Stevinson, '16. In Arizona, they visited Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. McGinley and their daughter, Jean Allen, B.S. in Ed. '33. In California the Wassers called on Virginia Oliver Parker, A.B. '23; Prewitt (P) Roberts, '07; Capt. Billy D. Kraxberger, B.S. in Ed. '55 and his wife, the former Dorothy Ann Selck, B.S. in Ed. '56; and they met Kenneth Ray, B.J. '34. In Arizona they called on a cousin, Blanche Osborn, B.S. in Ed. '18, and her roommate, Louise Hamilton, B.S. in Ed. '43. At San Antonio they visited Col. T. M. (Tubby) Cornell, '16, who was Toad's roommate that year, and Mrs. Cornell, the former Pauline Hubbell, who attended Stephens. In Pass Christian, Miss., the Wassers were guests of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Gundlach.

David Cole of Marshalltown, Ia. enters the University as a freshman this fall just 100 years after his great grandfather, Dr. Edward Lawrence, received his medical diploma from the institution that was a forerunner of the University's School of Medicine. It is probable that when Dr. Lawrence began his studies at the college in St. Louis it was affiliated with M.U.

Phil S. Gibson, '14

as its medical department, a connection that began in 1846 and ended in 1857. His diploma, from "Collegium Medicinae Missouriensis," was signed by Dr. Joseph N. McDowell, president of the board and dean of the faculty, and by other members of the faculty. A few years earlier, in 1854, Dr. McDowell had signed a similar diploma awarded Dr. W. W. Mayo who, with his two sons, founded the clinic at Rochester, Minn. Dr. Lawrence lived in the McDowell home while attending the medical college, after originally being hired as the doctor's stable boy. David Cole, who stands nearly 6 feet 7, is a promising prospect for Mizzou's freshman basketball team.

Jimmy (Pete) Bedford, globe-trotting free lance writer and photographer, has joined the University of Maryland faculty as assistant professor of journalism. He still has a lot of material from his 22-months world tour making the rounds of editorial offices, and as a going-away present he received acceptances from U. S. Camera and Ebony magazines. At last report, Jim still sported his extensive red handle-bar mustache. In his new job he'll be near his two brothers, John and Emmett, also alumni.

Chief Justice Phil S. Gibson's tribute to the memory of Mrs. Elva Lester which appears in the Letters column of the Alumnus probably would be echoed by all the "boys" who dined at her table during their student days. He has been Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California since 1940. He received A.B. and LL.B. degrees from the University of Missouri in 1914, and returned in 1955 to receive an LL.D. conferred by the University. He has been similarly honored by the College of the Pacific, Southwestern University, McGeorge College of Law, and the University of Southern California. Chief Justice Gibson is president of the board of directors of Hastings College of the Law, University of California and has long been prominent in state and national judicial circles. Mrs. Gibson is the former Victoria Glennon; they have a son, Blaine Alan, and live at 138 Isabella Ave., Atherton, Calif.

A grandson of the late Dr. A. Ross Hill, former president of the University, graduated in June from the University of Wisconsin with a string of honors. He is A. Ross McCause, son of Prof. and Mrs. Ralph A. McCause, of Madison, both of them alumni of M.U. Mrs. McCause is the former Jessie M. Hill. Young Ross was elected to Phi Beta Kappa (as was his sister Elizabeth, now Mrs. James T. Laible of San Francisco); he received the Navy League Award, given to the outstanding Navy senior; the Chicago Tribune gold medal for the highest academic standing in the senior class; and the Naval Institute Proceedings Award given to the outstanding NROTC contract student. Commissioned Ensign at graduation, he was assigned to special Communications School at Newport, R. I. and was to be flown to Europe by the Navy for Headquarters Staff service. As a student Ross had considerable experience in stage work and radio broadcasting.

Alumni clubs in summertime meetings

In the Nation's Capital

A turnout of 47 persons attended a special luncheon meeting of the Washington D. C. Alumni chapter at the Presidential Arms on July 13. Paul T. Truitt, the new president, officiated in that capacity for the first time. The principal speaker was Bus Entsminger, the University's director of alumni activities who, with Jean Madden and Jack Taylor of the Alumni Office, was in Washington to attend the American Alumni Council's annual conference.

Entsminger reviewed some of the progress and expansion the University has made in recent years, and outlined the building program which has given the campus a new look. He also touched on some of the problems facing the University and discussed the alumni achievement giving program as a means of easing University needs.

Barry and Lawrence Counties

Barry and Lawrence County alumni met at LeDuc's Cafe in Mt. Vernon July 28.

Good turnouts from each county were on hand. Introduced were District 12 Board Representative Ray Graham of Mt. Vernon; Barry County Chairman Jack Fox of Monett and Barry County Committee members Sam Gardner of Monett and Joe Ellis of Cassville; and Lawrence County Chairman Bob Stemmons and County Committee member Don Millsap, both of Mt. Vernon.

Bob Stemmons presided and Jean Madden of the Alumni Office showed slides depicting the tremendous building program on the campus.

The consensus was that since the meeting was such a success, it should be an annual affair.

At Mo and Jr.'s in Cleveland

The Cleveland area alumni patronized one of their number when they met July 8 at Mo and Junior's Restaurant at 2887 Noble Road, Cleveland. This elegant new Cleveland Heights eatery is co-owned by Mo Modzewleski, of Maryland, former star of college and pro football and Junior Wren, former Missouri captain, who is now a star defensive back with the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Plans were discussed for a Cleveland Alumni pilgrimage to the Penn State game modeled on their most enjoyable trip to Michigan last year.

President Frank Muth announced that because of business and health reasons he must be replaced in his office, and a committee of Paul Collins and Al Hickman was selected to screen candidates for this important job.

Jack Taylor and Jean Madden of the Alumni Office staff were on hand for the meeting, and together they handled the program for the meeting. Jack, as Timothy Hays, handled the light side; and Jean gave a report on the changing face of the campus.

Two-County Meet in Ava

Wright and Douglas County alumni met June 9 for a picnic and chicken barbecue at the home of Douglas County chairman Dale Moore of Ava. Wright County Agricultural Agent Arlen Schwinke of Hartville supervised the barbecuing, and his efforts were obviously appreciated.

Alumni Secretary Bus Entsminger welcomed and thanked the alumni for their interest, and slides of the campus building program were shown.

Elda Callaway and Jim Curry agreed to serve on the Douglas County Committee with Chairman Moore and promote more alumni activity in south central Missouri.

Louisville Starts Planning

An organizational meeting of Louisville area alumni was planned and arranged by Mrs. Lawrence Meyer on July 7 at the picturesque Casa Grisanti Restaurant in Louisville.

The twenty transplanted Tigers who attended heard a report on the changing face of the campus by Jean Madden and were entertained by humorist Timothy Hays.

Mrs. Meyers reported that many other alumni in the area had sent their regrets at not being able to attend. She was elected president of the new organization and was asked to proceed with plans for a fall meeting.

Frank Muth displays stack of correspondence and other materials accumulated during his tenure as president of the Cleveland Alumni Club. Seated with him is Nan Leibold, and standing is Sue Lega, '55

Another advance for Duckworth

T. A. Duckworth, LL.B. '36, has recently become vice-president and secretary of Employers Mutuals of Wausau, with which he has been associated since he left the campus. He attended Central College at Fayette, Mo. before entering the University's School of Law. At M. U. he was Dean (president) of Delta Theta Phi law fraternity and was Commencement orator of his graduating class.

Duckworth, a member of the bar in both Missouri and Wisconsin, joined Employers Mutuals at Kansas City, working in the claim and legal department. In 1944 he moved to Wausau to head the personnel department and was elected secretary of the company in 1957. Named vice-president and secretary this year, he continues to direct the personnel department.

After only three years at Wausau, Duckworth was named "Man of the Year" by the Junior C. of C. He is a former president of the Wisconsin Public Health Council and has served on the Wisconsin Society for Mental Health, the Governor's Commission on Human Rights, and the Wisconsin State C. of C. He has served on national committees of the American Mutual Insurance Alliance and the National Association of Manufacturers, as well as the American Society of Personnel Administrators.

Duckworth is married to the former Edwina Nelson of Boonville, Mo. She received a B.J. degree from the University in 1934. The Duckworths have three daughters. Mrs. Duckworth's father, Edgar Nelson of Boonville, is a former Secretary of State of Missouri.

St. Louisans Enjoy a Picnic

On June 11 the St. Louis Alumni Association held its second annual summer picnic at Green Acres park in St. Louis County. Jim Turner was in charge of the arrangements. The outing was designed for recreation, with corkball, swimming and other outdoor activities and no formal program. Alumni Secretary Bus Icesminger and Assistant Athletic Director Harry Ice represented the University at the successful affair.

District Meet at St. Charles

The District 6 Alumni meeting held at the Golf View Inn in St. Charles June 23 was attended by over a hundred persons.

St. Charles County Alumni President Roland Pundmann presided. District 6 Board of Directors' Representative and Vice President-elect Brad Brett of Mexico, shared speaking honors with Missouri head football coach Dan Devine. Mr. Brett reported on alumni affairs in general and active membership in particular and introduced Bob Hoffman, Montgomery County Chairman; Zeke McIntyre, Audrain County Chairman and Judge J. Overton Fry, Pike County chairman. Coach Devine both enlightened and entertained the crowd with his review of the past season and his preview of the coming year. The meeting closed with a viewing of the official Orange Bowl film.

In a St. Charles County election which was held in conjunction with the meeting, nominating committee chairman Bob Niedner's slate was elected by acclamation. Jim Evans, D.V.M., was elected president; Paul Rother, M.D., vice-president; Roy Westerfeld, D.D.S., treasurer; and Don Dalton, an attorney, was elected secretary.

Truitt Heads Washington Club

Paul T. Truitt is the new president of the Washington Alumni Club, succeeding William L. Browne. Truitt is president of the National Plant Food Institute. Other new officers are: Miss Nancy Nelson, first vice-president; Samuel C. Brightman, second vice-president; Miss Dorothy Pierce, secretary; and Martin Mayes, treasurer. Frank B. Scheetz continues as sergeant-at-arms.

The eighth annual Parents Day at the University, a campus-wide open house for parents of all new students, will be held Oct. 22. President Elmer Ellis has invited the parents of all newly enrolled students to attend, to meet the deans and administrative officials of the University at an informal reception, and to attend the football game that afternoon between Iowa State and Missouri universities.

Dr. Henry E. Bent, dean of the Graduate School, has returned to the campus after a nine-month leave of absence during which time he served as Director of the multi-million-dollar Title IV program of the National Defense Education Act in Washington. Dr. Raymond E. Peck, professor of geology, served as acting dean of the Graduate School.

Dick Cochran

Cochran in Olympics

As reported in the June Alumnus, Dick Cochran won the National Collegiate discus title with a throw of 188 feet. A like throw a week later placed him second to Olympic Champion Al Oerter in the national A.A.U. meet at Bakersfield, California.

Then came the big test, as Dick, the only collegian among the finalists, took on the best discus throwers in the country and perhaps in the world in the Olympic Trials. Though the tremendous pressure took its toll on the young weightman, Cochran managed to throw 181 feet 11 inches on his next to last throw and edge Jay Sylvester by inches for third place behind Oerter and winner Rink Babka who threw 192 feet.

Dick Cochran thus became the first University of Missouri Olympic track finalist since hurdler Dick Ault made the team in 1948.

In the first Olympic Practice Meet, Cochran became the third man on the American team and the eighth man in history to throw over 190 feet. He also passed a second major barrier as he finally beat Oerter, the defending champion, against whom he had competed unsuccessfully as a sophomore in college meets, in the Pan American Games and in the meets mentioned above.

His last major goals still before him are an Olympic victory and a throw of over 200 feet. In a quietly confident way he believes he is capable of both of these. Reaching either of these lofty goals may mean reaching both of them for the 6 foot 5 inch, 225 pounder.

Tigers picked for third

We've been chided by some of you for our pessimism in not picking the Tigers to win the Conference football championship, but we've been justified in our caution by the results of the recent survey of conference area sportswriters. The results of this 15th annual pre-season poll show Oklahoma and Kansas at the top of the heap with Missouri a distant third.

This is not to say that we believe the Tiger team will necessarily be weaker than last year's second place team; it could be the strongest team Devine has had at Missouri and one of the strongest and deepest squads here in many years. However, last year's sub par (for Oklahoma) Sooner squad and above par Jayhawk team are both supposed to be considerably improved as are the other teams in the league.

It will be tough to replace the top three linemen: Magac, Sloan and Swaney, and quarterbacks Snowden and Haas. Junior Ron Taylor, with minutes of experience, will vie with Johnson and Hunter for quarterback; Daryl Krugman is out for the year with a knee injury. Tackle Bucky Wegener, co-captain, will be out for weeks with foot injuries from a power mower mishap.

We open at home Sept. 17 against a tough Southern Methodist team; and even though Don Meredith, our nemesis last year, has gone to the pros, the Mustangs will probably be a more dangerous, better balanced team for this last meeting in a long series. On Oct. 1 at State College, Pennsylvania, the Tigers meet Penn State, another team whose All-American quarterback candidate, Richie Lucas, drove, or I should say, passed, us to distraction last year. The Nittany Lions are again regarded as one of the top teams in the east. These two worthy opponents, both of whom beat us rather handily last year should provide an interesting contrast between last year's team and the 1960 model.

The Homecoming game against K.U. November 19 could determine both the Conference championship and the league's representative in the Orange Bowl. Though Missouri is technically ineligible to succeed itself, Oklahoma is definitely outlawed because of N.C.A.A. probationary status; and if Missouri and Kansas should both have good years, the invitation would probably go to the winner. J.M.

In addition to Tiger Track Coach Tom Botts, who has developed him from a boy with potentiality to a man with strength, confidence and ability, two other men have greatly influenced Cochran's development; and, strangely enough, both of them were discus throwers for Coach Botts. Mel Sheehan, 1949 Drake Relays discus champ and now principal of the Normandy Junior High School in St. Louis, first recognized Dick's potential as an eighth grader at Brookfield, Mo. Mel's successor at Brookfield, Tiger shot and discus star Phil Brusca is the man who gets the major credit for developing the interested eighth grader into a high school senior who broke his own state record by almost 25 feet.

Dick made international headlines off the field. He blasted the handling of the American Olympic team, claiming poor performance and low morale resulted from management which stressed sightseeing for the athletes rather than intense competition, and creating a picnic atmosphere. He was joined by other American athletes in voicing the criticism.

Degrees to 570 in August

At Summer Session Commencement exercises held on the campus August 5, President Elmer Ellis conferred degrees upon 570 graduates.

Roi S. Wood, superintendent of schools at Joplin, Mo., was Commencement speaker. He urged the members of the class to "consider our heritage as a nation."

"You cannot repay those who have gone before you," he said, "but you do have a responsibility of repayment by seeing that those who follow in your footsteps have an inheritance which guarantees to them the freedoms you are enjoying.

"Examine for yourselves this great University you have been attending. You cannot begin to pay for the labors of others or for the investment that the State of Missouri had made in you."

Mr. Wood was graduated from the University with an A.M. degree in 1934. He is vice-president and president-elect of the Missouri Association of School Administrators and is a past president of the Missouri Public Junior College Association. He is a past member of the executive board of the Missouri State Teachers Association. Before going to Joplin in 1944 as superintendent of schools, Mr. Wood served in the same capacity in Wright City, Eaglesville, Pierce City and Butler, all in his native Missouri.

Significant grant

Enables M. U. to set up
program for gifted students.

THE UNIVERSITY HAS RECEIVED A GRANT OF $210,000 from the Ford Foundation to establish a special program to educate gifted students for careers in college teaching. President Elmer Ellis believes the gift may prove to be one of the most important that the University has received in its history.

"The gift will enable us to establish a carefully planned and well integrated program and will greatly strengthen the very superior program that has been going forward on our campus for years," he said. The grant will allow the University to institute a Three-Year Master's Degree Program for the preparation of college teachers as envisioned by Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, consultant to the Ford Foundation and formerly director of the Carnegie Fund for the Advancement of Teaching. The University is one of fourteen institutions of higher learning to receive grants for the special program. At Missouri committees and faculties have been working on the plan for several years, and intense preparation has gone into it in recent months.

Dr. Clarence H. Foust, a vice-president of the Ford Foundation, in announcing the grants, said that they were made to support a concerted effort to strengthen the master's degree and to expand, speed, and improve the preparation of college teachers. The universities will use the grants to inaugurate new, three-year programs; these will span the last two years of college and the first year of graduate school and lead to the master's degree. The programs will also stress basic work toward the doctor's degree.

"Strengthening the quality of the master's degree is a logical and strategic means of strengthening the quality of instruction in American colleges and universities," Dr. Faust said. "At the same time, new efforts need to be made to accelerate the output of Ph.D.'s for careers as college teachers. This is another important aim of the programs being assisted by the series of grants. The graduate and undergraduate faculties of each of the fourteen universities designed their own programs. While the programs differ in certain details, they share several important features that, taken together, create the framework of a national experiment."

The Missouri Three-Year Master's Degree Program is in complete harmony with the Carmichael nationwide plan and will be strengthened and refined as a result of the grant, according to Dr. W. Francis English, dean of the College of Arts and Science. The honors program, which is a part of the new plan, has been in effect here for many years in the form of special courses or special sections for superior students and the distinction programs for the top scholastic group.

Under the three-year program, top-ranking students will have special counseling and advising, much directed study and reading, seminar-type classes, more special courses and, in general, a more concentrated and advanced course of study.

Besides being aimed at providing more intensified training for teaching, the program is designed to strengthen all the University programs in the academic field for superior students, from the freshman year on, and particularly to coordinate the work of undergraduate years with graduate work. Junior and senior work will be somewhat more advanced in honor courses.

Coordinating undergraduate and graduate work will provide a much stronger foundation for the A.M. degree, and will also give a broader educational base for students who elect to go on to the Ph.D. Because of its increased requirements and advanced work, the rigorous three-year supervised educational program preceding the A.M. will make it easier for graduate students to earn a Ph.D. with two years of study beyond the A.M.

Dean English said that while eligible students would not be regularly enrolled in the new Master's Degree Program until the junior year, the recently established Honors College would recruit promising students as early as in the freshman year. The University would also invite the cooperation of secondary schools and junior colleges in interesting superior students in the program.

Special Institute Offered

The University this year is offering a special institute for training new counseling and guidance personnel for secondary schools. It is one of only four institutes in this field authorized by the U. S. Office of Education for a full academic year. The special institute is offered under a grant of almost $200,000 from the Federal government through the National Defense Education Act. Dr. Paul C. Polmantier, professor of education, is directing the institute and reports the selection of 30 high school teachers from 12 midwest states from a list of more than 200 applicants. The other institutes are at the Universities of Florida and Southern California, and at Pennsylvania State University. Dr. Doral N. West, a psychologist with considerable experience in counseling and guidance work, has been appointed visiting assistant professor of education to assist in the special institute. He will do some teaching in regular counseling and guidance courses in the College of Education in addition to his work in the institute during the year. He received a Doctor of Education degree from the University in 1958. While working toward his degree here, he served as counselor in the Testing and Counseling Service. For the past year the 38-year-old psychologist has been in private practice in North Dakota. Before that he was chief psychologist at the University of North Dakota Medical Center Rehabilitation Unit. He has had various guidance and counselor responsibilities in the past ten years.

Letters

To the Editor:

Please permit my strong protest to a flagrant piece of propaganda in the April issue, entitled, "A Matter of Principle." It is also a matter of principle with me in objecting to any article upon a highly controversial issue being slipped in without any discussion at all of its possible merits. To me this fair statement of the whole case is the measure of intellectual integrity as contrasted with propaganda.

The issue here is the questionable concerted action of certain university presidents in a frenzied protest against the affidavit requirement of the National Defense Act. It amounts to a supporting affidavit to the oath of allegiance, denying membership in any organization advocating the overthrow of the government by force.

And what's wrong with that? Well, the learned leaders insist this is an "affront" to youth; and its enforcement "distasteful" to them. As an academic problem for classroom discussion, maybe; but mighty poor timing for the realistic arena of world tensions today. J. Edgar Hoover calls this agitation "oversensitiveness on the part of our intellectuals."

Why not let youth speak for itself? According to the University Professors' Bulletin, March, 1960, page 56, Senator Russell is quoted: "I have not received a single letter from a single student in my state;" And the AAUP Bulletin continues: "What is still needed is a broad student protest to support the letters of the college Presidents." Is this academic freedom?

According to President Pusey of Harvard: "The question is not accommodating ourselves to the disclaimer, but only what can we do to persuade Congress to get rid of it." When this "persuasion" became a boycott of the Defense Act, it was going far afield from the legitimate business of education which is to educate not legislate.

It appears to me that in the name of academic freedom but more in the spirit of an organized pressure group, the universities have mounted a monumental propaganda against a law concerning which they must have had every opportunity at the proper time to present their objections.

Even though, according to latest reports, the educators seem to have won their fight against the law, in the spirit of that academic freedom and intellectual independence which I, myself, learned at Missouri, at Harvard, and at Columbia, I do appreciate having my say, which, in conclusion is this:

That in this critical time these splendid administrators of the world's finest schools should not squander their vitally needed educational leadership making mountains out of mole hills; for what our country needs most now is not more academic freedom but more patriotic devotion.

Dr. Frank Lowe
San Diego 3, Calif.

Editor's note: The "flagrant piece of propaganda" objected to by Dr. Lowe apparently is this paragraph which appeared in the article, "A Matter of Principle," in April: "When a number of institutions (joined in December by President Eisenhower) opposed the 'disclaimer affidavit' required of students seeking loans under the National Defense Education Act, many citizens—including some alumni—assailed them for their stand against 'swearing allegiance to the United States.' The fact is, the disclaimer affidavit is not an oath of allegiance to the United States (which the Education Act also requires, but which the colleges have not opposed). Fortunately, alumni who took the trouble to find out what the affidavit really was apparently outnumbered, by a substantial majority, those who leaped before they looked. Coincidentally or not, most of the institutions opposing the disclaimer affidavit received more money from their alumni during the controversy than ever before in their history."

To the Editor:

The news of the death of Mrs. Elva Lester has been received with deep regret by the many alumni who knew her as the kindhearted, jovial, and efficient manager of the training table and board ing house.

As the widowed mother of three young children, Mrs. Lester came to Columbia in June, 1912 at the suggestion of my brother, Blaine, and myself, in whose home she had served as housekeeper during our boyhood in Grant City, Missouri. She established her first boarding house at 704 Maryland with five boarders paying $3.50 per week. Her reputation as an unexcelled cook soon increased this number to fifty. In 1914 she was given the management of the training table by the Athletic Department of the University.

I believe her location was on Lowry Street, where the Missouri store now stands. Later she moved to 517 South Sixth Street where she continued serving the training table, as well as meals to many other students. She insisted on doing all of her own cooking and served three meals a day to as many as seventy-five students at a time. As the years passed, sons of her former boarders came to her.

Among those who ate at her table many made names for themselves as athletes. When I was at Missouri "Dobby" Knobel and "Sol" Hastings, both of Grant City, who established enviable records on the football team, were among her boarders. Later Bob Simpson, who broke the pole vault record, boarded with Mrs. Lester, as did Don Faurot, Director of Athletics, and Jack Matthews, Dean of Men. It was with great pride that Mrs. Lester followed the career of all her "boys" as they established themselves in different professions and important positions.

Once interviewed, Mrs. Lester said, "For the first three weeks of the term, I am glad when I come out even. After that they become busy and begin to eat less. That is when we begin to make profits, and I've been able so far to make a living for my children and send them all to school."

Her son Ralph is now Principal of the Ponca City Junior High School. Allen now lives in Wichita, Kansas, and her daughter Ruby resides in Columbia.

Mrs. Lester was one of the most wonderful women I have ever known. She made a home for many of us when we were away from home and her "boys" will always think of her with love and appreciation.

The Alumnus receives review copies of new books rather regularly, and the chore of discussing them is passed on to competent authorities. When a new book requires special treatment, however, it lands in this department. That is the case with a distinctive volume, The Shoemaker and the Elves, by the Brothers Grimm, published by Charles Scribner's and Sons, of New York. Contrasted with some fiction that comes to hand, this work is unique in that it is devoid of obscenity. Perhaps the reader should be let in on the plot and story. It seems that this shoemaker's business is lousy and he is practically impoverished (probably never went to college, but the authors make no point of this). The cobbler was down to his last single piece of leather, enough for one pair of shoes, so he cut this out and left it at his bench before retiring. Next morning he was startled to see that it had been changed into a fine pair of shoes; the workmanship was flawless. Well, he was able to sell the shoes at a nice profit (no labor costs) and then buy twice as much leather, which he cut out and left on his workbench at bedtime. Lo and behold, when he arose next morning, there were two pairs of shoes, as expertly made as the first pair. The shoemaker and his wife were delighted, and with the sale they were able to increase production once more; in fact the process multiplied until they were prosperous again. By now their curiosity about the identity of the night shift could be contained no longer, so they sat up late to see who their talented benefactor might be. Well, they found out—but that's enough of the story. No use to spoil the ending for the reader. We can tell you, though, that there's a clue to the nocturnal craftsmen in the title of the book. And it takes nothing away from the story to reveal in advance that everything ends happily and pleasantly. That's what makes it unique. We read it clear through, and never a mention of murder, neuroses, incest or dope.

The Brothers Grimm are modest indeed, for nowhere do they give their first names, and that makes it impossible for us to check to see whether they are Missouri alumni. However, research does show that the illustrator of the volume, Adrienne Adams, is a Missouri U. product (1928) and that must be the reason why the book came to this office. Her delightful pictures make this a most attractive and colorful volume, one that will surely have brisk pre-Christmas sales. Adrienne Adams has illustrated some twenty-five books for various publishers. A recent one is "Going Barefoot," by Aileen Fisher, also an alumna of Missouri (1927). She has been designer and art director for several firms. In private life Adrienne Adams is Mrs. John Anderson. The Andersons live in New Jersey.

If you can't get a copy of The Shoemaker and the Elves, and you must know how the story ends, write this department for particulars.

It has been moving day on the campus. Several new buildings are now occupied. Their tenants come from old buildings and their places in turn are taken by inhabitants of still older buildings. At the moment not everyone is sure where everybody is. The shuffle has involved entire departments and office staffs. The University's Office of Public Information has recently been engaged in a frantic trackdown, sifting fact from rumor in an effort to get all hands located. A report that a certain department has moved to a certain building did not always pan out that way; sometimes it developed that people at the supposed new address never heard of the missing department. This confusion could have been averted had the movers thought to leave a forwarding address. So, as the Alumnus goes to press, several departments are still unaccounted for. The surest way to learn their whereabouts, of course, is to check with the payroll office.

A layman's inspection of the new Fine Arts Building produces a layman's conclusion that the edifice has everything, with one glaring exception. There is no piano chute. It is possible that piano chutes are not standard equipment for conservatories, but one would be welcome in this case. Two or three dozen pianos, in varying states or repair but all heavy, are to be transported from Lathrop Hall into their new home. Getting them out of Lathrop is just a matter of timing; it will be a race against the imminent collapse of that ancient building. But once the instruments are at the site of the new structure, there remains a challenging engineering chore. Some kind of elevator service must be devised to get the music boxes into the numerous practice rooms on the second floor. The high-ceilinged south lobby appears the logical place to install a launching pad. The task will be to hoist the pianos onto a second floor platform that overlooks the lobby. The situation obviously calls for some research into the techniques employed by the chaps who put up the Pyramids.

Work has begun on a new building for the School of Journalism. To make room for it, one of the most attractive spots on the campus had to be torn up. But worse than that, to hear journalism students talk, was the destruction of the so-called kissing bridge. This concrete and brick structure spanned a stream made by a storm sewer and which has now gone underground in the construction area. As a concession to the campaign to preserve the kissing bridge, workmen saved the individual bricks, presumably to be used in reconstruction of the kissing bridge at an other point where the stream comes out in the open. Until the project is completed, it must be assumed there is no other place for people to kiss. The surprising thing about this campaign is that journalists are not the blase, objective sophisticates we have been led to believe they are. Actually, it develops, they are romantic, tenderhearted and nostalgic. And until their campaign came along last spring we were unaware that the bridge had a reputation as a lovers' spot. We have crossed that bridge many times, but nobody ever kissed us, nor did we ever come upon any smooching. The bridge was simply a convenient means of crossing over a stream, which one did hastily since the rivulet was often fed with dishwater, beer suds and crank case drainings. But if the journalists claim it was the kissing bridge, we accept that as accurate reporting, and we say more power to their little re-construction project, and long may they kiss and tell.

Dr. Craig on Wilson

Woodrow Wilson at Princeton, by Dr. Hardin Craig, examines Wilson as an educational administrator and philosopher. As student and teacher at Princeton from 1898 to 1910, Dr. Craig had close intellectual ties with Wilson, who was president of that university from 1902 to 1910. In his book, published by the University of Oklahoma Press, Dr. Craig examines Wilson's idea of continuity in education—an educational system that renewed itself through its broad general efficiency, rather than through the narrower field of specialization.

Upon becoming president of the university, Wilson carried through a thorough-going reform of both curriculum and teaching methods. The most important change was the establishment of the preceptor system. Dr. Craig, as one of the original 47 preceptors appointed by Wilson, worked within that system as Edgerstoune preceptor from 1905 to 1910, then left to teach at the University of Minnesota. That same year Wilson left Princeton to accept the nomination for governor of New Jersey.

As the author indicates, Wilson's philosophy followed closely the groundwork already established by James McCosh, president of Princeton from 1868 to 1888. McCosh's approach to education was through those subjects which do not easily yield to the method of experimentation, such as the humanities and religion. Wilson, trained under McCosh, was well prepared in the discursive method for his application of ideas to Princeton when he became its president, and followed intelligently the Baconian induction philosophy long in force at the college.

"It is hardly fair to think of Wilson taking hold of an institution and improving it to a high degree," Dr. Craig writes. "Princeton was already good, but he made it better." The book is a study of the philosophy of higher education as it exemplified itself at Princeton and is really the philosophy that Wilson held. His philosophy and point of view lay in general welfare, according to Dr. Craig, and this man, later to be President of the United States, believed that an American should be trained to support American democratic ideas. "Wilson was not a man of pure theory, but also one of broad practical ability," Dr. Craig says in the book. He remarked that his own experience at Princeton was great in the sense of moral, democratic, and industrious greatness.

Woodrow Wilson at Princeton, written primarily for historians, philosophers, and educators, also has much to say to those interested in education and history who are not professionally involved with them.

Dr. Craig, internationally known scholar in Shakespearean and medieval English religious drama, came to the University in 1948 as visiting professor of English, and this fall joins the faculty of Stephens College.

Mahoney's Romney story

Tom Mahoney's fifth book, The Story of George Romney (Harper and Brothers), is a friendly and lively account of the colorful president of American Motors Corporation. He gives the details of Romney's early life, how he got his start in the automobile industry, worked his way up to the presidency of American Motors, reorganized it from top to bottom, dealt with dissident stockholders, and made it highly profitable in a few short years. Romney faced discouraging odds, but his insight, hard work and courage paid off.

Mahoney gives an absorbing profile of Romney as a Mormon who was a missionary in his youth and really prays over decisions, as a spiritual leader of 3,600 members of the denomination, as a devoted family man and as a civic leader. The story is a modern American success saga, with elements of the most improbable fiction and detailed fact—all of it true. Mahoney has done a tremendous research job, and the book is loaded with detail, but it becomes a highly interesting account and should appeal to all who like to read about David beating Goliath, or the heroes of Horatio Alger.

Mahoney, who received his B.J. from the University in 1927, is a prolific writer on business and science subjects, and is a former associate editor of Look and Fortune magazines. His other recent books include The Great Merchants and The Merchants of Life.

Dr. H. H. London, professor of industrial education at the University, spent several weeks in Russia last spring on an official visit to universities, technical and vocational schools, collective farms and various industries in the Soviet Union. He served as chairman of a three-man delegation representing the U. S. Department of State, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and the American Vocational Education Association. Their trip was a return visit after Dr. London had escorted a group of Soviet educational leaders on a tour of educational and industrial institutions over the United States in February.
