A Deep neural network learning system is designed and built using the popular open-source machine learning library Tensor-Flow. Multiple convolutional recurrent neural networks have been trained to solve the protein secondary structure prediction problem. The performance is evaluated on popular benchmark dataset CB513. The best performance achieved is 69.5% of Q8 accuracy.