THE CIDER MILL

Everything looked the same and yet everything might have been so different . . .

SOMETIMES, on crisp fall days, you can notice the sweet, rich smell of russet apples a good hundred yards before you come to Bailey's Cider Mill down on the Old County Road. It drifts out of the presses and hangs low over the ground and reminds you of Halloween and Thanksgiving and all of the good things of autumn rolled into one.

It reminded Harry Mason, driving back from a business trip to a neighboring town, of all those things and something more—that it would be a wonderful idea to take home some apples and a jug of Bailey's famous cider.

A few moments later he eased his car off the road and pulled to a stop at the side of the mill. It was the first time he had been there for some years, and after he got out of his car he stood and looked around him for a moment, refreshing his memory and trying to see if there were any signs of change.

Everything looked the same. The mill was as he had always remembered it. The apple orchards looked full and orderly as they always had. And the old Bailey homestead still sat on top of the knoll, tranquil among the giant elms that surrounded it.

Harry Mason nodded thoughtfully. The whole place had an air of peace and permanence—and that was good. It was good because that was what Tom Bailey had worked for and planned for right up to the time of his death. Peace and permanence. Security for his wife Nora and for his son Roger.

Tom Bailey had had a taste of insecurity in his own younger days, Harry remembered. His father had left the orchards and the mill to him so burdened with debts and mortgages and taxes that for several years it was touch and go whether Tom could keep the place at all. It took a lot of work—with a little luck thrown in—for him to get "out from under" and put the orchards on a paying basis.

Harry glanced up again at the old house on the hill, recalling how he and Tom Bailey had sat there evenings making plans so the Baileys' security would not be jeopardized again. Enough life insurance to pay for help to keep the place running without digging into Nora's income from it. A separate New York Life policy for Roger's schooling. Some extra life insurance to take care of estate taxes and other obligations that might otherwise cause some of the land to be sold . . .

Yes, Harry thought, the old mill had an air of peace and permanence—and that was good. It was the thing Tom Bailey had sought for his family . . . and the thing Harry, as a New York Life agent, had helped others build for theirs. Harry smiled a little to himself as he turned and walked around to the broad doorway at the front of the mill.

FEW OCCUPATIONS offer a man so much in the way of personal reward as life underwriting. Many New York Life agents are building very substantial futures for themselves by helping others plan ahead for theirs. If you would like to know more about a life insurance career, talk it over with the New York Life manager in your community—or write to the Home Office at the address below.

The November Alumnus features John H. Norton, Tiger half back of '95, who has followed the '52 team from California to Missouri. His full story is told on page 5.

The cover photograph is by John Holik.

How the campus has changed. I am referring not as much to physical change as what we might call personal habits of various organizations. Do you recall when Jesse Hall, first floor, was the gathering spot of hundreds between classes? How girls and boys alike used to "hotfoot" it from as far away as the east campus if necessary, just to meet the gang for a quick cigarette, and then hurry back to class; or even better, to arrange for a coke date during the first free hour? A quick observation of this University "Hub" today reveals quite a different picture.

The reasons for these changes are probably many and varied and far be it from me to hazard a guess as to what causes such a change. Probably it is a result of several factors. A larger student body, more classes throughout the day, rather than a concentration in two or three hours, and, of course, the presence of our new Union, which lends its facilities so handsomely to "jelly hours." Another reason is probably the rearrangement of facilities in campustown establishments that used to cater to a lounging group, and now caters to a strictly commercial crowd. If you want to buy something, okay. If not, move on. The University has needed the Student Union for many years, but the student bodies in the past six years have felt a more desperate need and its arrival is a blessing to the groups it shall serve in the future.

Regardless of what reasons are responsible for this shift in "hangouts," a new era is in evidence here on the campus. It belongs to a different view, of different age, and different facilities, but it is still the great University it has always been. Why? Because it stands for something greater than physical substances. That is why it will always be the same University you and I remember, regardless of what change the future has in store.

Homecoming

Homecoming is always a thrill to us here on the campus as well as you who return for it. We see and welcome again our favorite home-comers as well as some of whom were only lately our favorite students. The University always tries to make Homecoming a happy time for you all, and this year there are special attractions planned.

ALUMNI HEADQUARTERS

You will, of course, get your biggest thrill out of the Union. Even though you have seen pictures of it in the papers, you will give a little gasp as you enter its great hall and say, "I just didn't realize that it could be so wonderful." And you will be happy for the present student body that it can enjoy this great building which could not be built in your day on the campus.

Homecoming headquarters will be located on the first floor. At a central location you can register, meet old pals, and leave messages for those who have not shown up. Luncheons and dinners are available in the cafeteria or in the Colonial Grill Room.

THE PROGRAM

Friday, November 21 will see the kick-off to a grand week-end of festivities. A Romp Chomp, and for you old timers a Romp Chomp is a pep rally with refreshments thrown in. Then you can take a tour to view the decorations on all the organized houses. A lot of cleverness and work have gone into these stunt decorations, and you won't want to miss seeing a single one of them.

Saturday morning you will want to watch the Homecoming Parade; then you will wend your way out to the stadium for the Tiger-Jayhawker battle, and this is the game that really counts to all Missourians. The Homecoming Stomp, or dance, will come off Saturday night in Rothwell Gymnasium with all alumni and their friends invited.

We hope you won't consider missing a great week-end. You won't want to miss seeing Bill and Sam and Mary again, as well as all those other guys who have written for tickets to the game.

So don't forget the dates—November 21 and 22. We'll meet you at the Union.

IN GRUNDY COUNTY

Alumni in Grundy County have chosen the date of December 5th for an alumni meeting in Trenton in the V.F.W. hall. All alumni in that area are urged to attend. Jack Matthews, Dean of Students, will speak to the group and Bus Entsminger, Director of Alumni Activities will attend.

At an organizational meeting held October 20th, plans for the coming year were mapped out. This meeting had been preceded by an election meeting at which time J. G. Blackmore was elected President. Miss Harriet Mermanda, Vice-President, Mrs. Robert Gallup, Secretary, and Earl Ebbe, Treasurer are the other officers. Retiring President William R. Denslow presided and explained the state-wide program of the Alumni Organization. Don McVay, district chairman of District II, of which Grundy County is a part, also addressed the group.

IN DAVIESS COUNTY

Word has come from Daviess County that plans for an organizational meeting will be forthcoming soon. Mrs. Myrtle Hammond is interested in reviving alumni interest as is Mrs. K. C. Froman, who is listed as President of that County.

IN HOUSTON

The absence of an organized club in this densely populated area has led some of the many Missourians who reside there to investigate the possibility of creating such an organization. Wood N. Taylor, Jr. has accepted the duty of instigating activity and the Alumni Office plans to send to him a list of alumni in the Houston area.

IN OKLAHOMA CITY

Alumni in Oklahoma plan a get-together Friday night, November 14th before the Oklahoma-Missouri game in Norman. Word comes from John Booth, President of the club that a swell party is planned for Missourians in the "Presidents" room of the Oklahoma Club at 6:00 p.m.

IN ST. LOUIS

St. Louis alumni have chosen the date of November 29 for the annual St. Louis area alumni party. All alumni in the St. Louis area are urged to attend and participate in activities.

The theme of this year's party is a dinner dance at the Missouri Athletic Club. The College of Engineering will be honored and President Middlebush and Dean Croft will be in attendance from the campus.

Stanley Stokes, Vice-President of the Union Electric Company, will be the speaker and a visit by St. Pat himself is expected. St. Pat celebrates his 50th anniversary this year and he is promising every alumnus who attends a fine program and an enjoyable evening.

IN LOS ANGELES

Alumni in the Los Angeles area will be treated to another fine get-together on November 19th. They will meet at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, 431 N. 7th St. and will hear Chief Justice Philip Gibson. President Alma Kinkade will preside, music will be furnished by Robin Devoe and Mr. Gibson will be introduced by Herbert Gall. A chicken dinner (for $3 including tax and tip) is on the menu and plans for a January dinner dance at the Miramar Hotel will be discussed.

IN LINCOLN

H. P. Davis, President, and Mrs. William F. Swindler, Secretary of the Lincoln Club arranged for a buffet luncheon in the Student Union on the campus of Nebraska University for all Missouri alumni attending the game between the Tigers and Cornhuskers on November 1. Students and alumni who were on hand for the game joined forces at the Burlington station and paraded 500 strong to the stadium.

Sunday, December 7 is the date for a Missouri alumni meeting for all alumni in the Southeastern area of Nebraska to attend a covered dish supper at 5:30 p.m. at Ellen Smith Hall in Lincoln. Earl Maxwell, Nebraska State forester, Missouri '11, will present a half hour program of colored slides.

IN WASHINGTON

Alumni in Washington plan to meet on or about November 14 to hear Congressman O. K. Armstrong talk on "Ethics in Government." A number of Deans from the campus are expected to be on hand for this meeting.

IN SPRINGFIELD

A board meeting of the Springfield, Illinois organization met at the home of Darwin and Ruth Flanigan, 1709 N. 21st on October 28. Plans for local alumni activities were formulated for the coming year and a dinner dance for all alumni in the area is being planned for December.

ALUMNI ATHLETIC ADVISORY COMMITTEE

This committee, under the chairmanship of Dutton Brookfield, of Kansas City, is one of the most active committees under the new organization of the General Alumni Association.

Well named, the committee seeks to advise the Intercollegiate Athletic Committee and make suggestions pertinent to state-wide interest in the University's Athletic Program. From the membership of this committee, two alumni are elected each year to serve on the Intercollegiate Athletic Committee as alumni representatives.

Drawing its membership from all areas of the state, the advisory committee is thus well informed of athletic interest from all areas, and is busy trying to coordinate state-wide interest.

Chairman Brookfield has called two meetings since September 15, and a third meeting will be held November 22nd. Topics being considered are campus hospitality programs to prospective athletes who visit the campus, newspaper contacts with most of the counties in the state and a program of state-wide support from alumni and citizens.

It is a committee designed to coordinate your interests with those from other areas.

Indicative of the strong support from all areas of the State in Missouri's fine athletic program which emphasizes a program above reproach in all aspects, the committee is most interested in maintaining a program completely devoid of "questionable practices." Full recognition of N. C. A. A. and Big-Seven conference regulations are adhered to, so that you and every other individual interested in a sports program may be proud of such a program.

M. U. GRADUATE DIRECTS HOSPITAL FOOD SERVICE

Maj. Elizabeth Carlross has been appointed chief of the food service division at Brooke Army Hospital Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.

She entered the Army as a civilian dietician in 1942 and was commissioned when dieticians became part of the regular army. She has served in hospitals in this country and in the Canal Zone.

MRS. NANNIE TIDD

Although she waited till she was 77 to enter the University, Mrs. Nannie Tidd was such an ardent alumna that she requested that "Old Missouri" be played at her funeral, and this was done when she was buried at the Salisbury Baptist Church on Oct. 11.

She came to Columbia in 1901 to educate her two children, and she has had children and grandchildren in the University ever since.

REIDER—HONOR STUDENT

The men that the army and navy are sending for special work in the University are offering a new challenge to civilian students. Lt. Richard K. Reider, USN, who received his B.A. degree from the University this fall, is one of those to complete the course with honors. He was recently elected to Phi Beta Kappa, although he finished the course while on active duty by correspondence with the University Extension Division.

Lt. Reider is a veteran pilot of over 11 years sea and shore service.

IT'S ON THE CAMPUS

Remember Where?

The stone Japanese lantern, whose picture we published last month in this column, stands in front of the Journalism Arch. It is an ancient lantern from an old Japanese estate used as the first American legation. The lantern was presented to Dean Walter Williams for the School of Journalism by the American Japan Society.

SO THE STUDENTS THINK

End Parking Problem—Get A Tank

Crunch!
Bang!
Crash!

No, it's not someone dynamiting Jesse Hall, or even a street repair crew. It's only a student in a hurry trying to park his heap.

Why so much trouble? Well, just try to find a parking place near campus sometime—anytime. Either students are driving two cars each, or there must not be enough parking space provided by the city or the University.

One student complained last week that he wore out two sets of tires one Wednesday morning driving around Boone county in trying to find a place to park. . . . Another missed three classes before he gave up and jellied the rest of the day. . . .

Many suggestions for remedy have been voiced by various individuals. One is to tear out all of the "temporary" buildings and replace them with parking lots. Another idea is to make a parking lot out of the vacant plot just east of the library. The Little Hinkson area north of T-1 is another possibility.

Hitt street could be the fore-runner of a whole string of street widening projects which would make room to park on both sides of streets. Now that's an idea.

There's that island in front of Brewer Field house which could be removed and the space made into two lines of angle parking. The circle drive at the entrance to Francis quadrangle could be enlarged into angle parking space also. Angle parking has it all over parallel anyway.

SMITH DECORATED

Robert Smith, '49 was awarded on Oct. 14 an Oak Leaf Cluster in lieu of a third Air Medal in recognition of the bravery he displayed piloting a reconaissance plane spotting artillery fire over enemy lines in Korea from Jan. 9 to April 7.

The citation accompanying the award read in part. . . . "Piloting an unarmed light aircraft over enemy lines to complete 40 combat missions within range of hostile small armed anti-aircraft fire."

While he was still fighting in Korea, his wife filed for him to run in the primary for the legislature from Boone County, and conducted his campaign until he came home just before time for voting. He won the nomination, which is equivalent to election in his county.

COVER BOY

Our cover boy for November is the homecomingest man we know anything about, and one who has been coming home to the campus as long and as often as anyone we know about. He was a Tiger half back in '96 and '98.

This year he has followed the team from California to Columbia.

But this trip is even more important to him than his other homecoming trips, because he is showing his bride, a retired school teacher like himself, his old home town and his old school.

On his watch chain he proudly wears three emblems, the small gold football, the American chemical society, and the badge of the Spanish American War, for which he volunteered as a student.

The senior Nortons live at 4750 Fifteenth Street, Sacramento, Cal. His son, Dr. John A. Norton '34 lives in Washington where he is on the staff of the Surgeon General.

The Alumnus Reviews

MOUNT RUSHMORE by Gilbert C. Fite, 272 pp. University of Oklahoma Press, 1952.

Any masterpiece is enjoyed and appreciated more after some study of its background, meaning and execution. This is particularly true of the gigantic project on Mount Rushmore. Tourists who come upon it unexpectedly are always somewhat awed by it, but ride vaguely on wondering about it, with the name of Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor merely a name to them at best.

However for anyone who is planning to travel to the Black Hills of South Dakota to view the four faces carved on the granite side of a mountain this book is a must if he is to understand "the most flamboyant attempt ever made by man to preserve his heritage for future generations." Many men worked long and hard to bring the idea of Mount Rushmore to fruition. Of course the man who worked longest and hardest was the sculptor Gutzon Borglum, the talented, temperamental genius who in the symbolic sculpturing of four great Americans, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt—molded a mountain into a monument to his beloved America.

How the memorial came into existence, plagued from the beginning by financial difficulties, engineering problems, and personality conflicts makes a fascinating page in American history. The author tells this Mount Rushmore story objectively, something that many historical writers are incapable of, and he tells it with warmth and human understanding that brings its actors to life.

Because the monument is a significant work of American art, artists will find it engrossing. Because of its engineering feat, engineers will read it with interest. And because it is a cultural monument to twentieth century America, as well as to the men whose faces are carved on top of Mount Rushmore, historians will find it definitive for the author is primarily a historian, but a historian endowed with the ability to write dramatically. For this reason he presents a well rounded picture of Borglum.

The book starts with the day the carving began. Calvin Coolidge in a ten gallon hat mounted a horse for the three mile ride to the base of Mount Rushmore. After the President's speech he handed the sculptor a set of drills.

The idea of commemorating some phase of American history by carving a gigantic monument in the Black Hills originated with the state historian, Doane Robinson. He first contacted the sculptor, Lorado Taft, but because of ill health the Chicago sculptor could not come to examine Black Hills granite. Then Borglum, who was at this time carving the head of Robert E. Lee on Stone Mt., was contacted.

The man who did the most to put the project across was Senator Peter Norbeck, who had been South Dakota's first native governor. There was local, state and national opposition to it from the first and this opposition continued to its completion.

It was begun in 1927, and the final drilling was in 1941. It cost, including money from private sources, $989,992.32 of which Borglum received about $170,000, or about $12,000 a year for the 14 years he worked on it.

The author of this book, who holds his Ph.D. degree from the University of Missouri, is author of two other books.

the FULBRIGHT GRANTS

by Elmer Ellis

Dean of the College of Arts and Science

Dr. and Mrs. Donald L. Wadell with native friends and guide in Egypt.

The end of World War II found the United States government in possession of large amounts of supplies and equipment in various countries where our armies had been stationed. While all of this equipment was useful, much of it was hardly worth bringing back to the United States. All of it was desperately needed by our allies. Under Congressional authority it was sold to them at fair prices. After this sale other problems came up. The allies whose economies had been wrecked by the war could pay only in their own money, as they lacked dollars or the means of securing them. The United States used these payments to buy such goods and services as it needed in these countries but it was impossible to collect all of the money without wrecking their already depleted economies. These debts threatened the stability of the financial and trade structure of the non-Communist world.

One statesman had a vision of a program that would enable the countries to pay for this surplus equipment, and at the same time serve the national interest of the United States by promoting world understanding. He was James William Fulbright, United States Senator from Arkansas. Senator Fulbright is a native of Sumner, Missouri, a graduate of the University of Arkansas and Oxford University, where he was a Rhodes scholar. Fulbright had been a member of the faculty and President of the University of Arkansas, and combined educational vision with international statesmanship of a high order. His proposal was so timely and intelligent that it was readily accepted by Congress and the President.

Senator Fulbright's plan was simple to leave these funds in the money of the country that had received the surplus goods, and to spend it for the exchange of students and teachers between that country and the United States. As it was worked out, the plans were budgeted on a twenty year basis, so that the exchanges would continue at an established scale for that long.

This was the origin of the Fulbright fellowships and school and university teacher exchanges. They have provided transportation for many foreign students coming to the University of Missouri for study. They have also enabled University of Missouri students, graduates and faculty to study and teach in many parts of Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. American school teachers sent abroad to teach for a year in the schools of these countries are a prominent feature of the program. The Alumni Association does not have a complete record of its graduates who have taught abroad under the plan, and it would welcome this information from them.

Last year six University of Missouri faculty members, probably as large a group as came from any American university, were invited to teach or do research in foreign countries. These were Professor Noel P. Gist, who did research in Urban Sociology in India. Professor Ellis R. Graham, who did research on soils in Australia, Professor John Ruff, who served as adviser to the Ministry of Education in Turkey, Professor Charles Turner, who did research in Dairy Husbandry in New Zealand, Professor Donald L. Waidelich, who taught electronics in Egypt, and Dean Elmer Ellis, the writer of this article, who taught American History at the University of Amsterdam in The Netherlands and also at the Salzburg Seminar of American Studies in Austria.

These faculty members could not have limited themselves to their major assignment if they had tried. Besides teaching American History to Dutch university students, for example, I was called upon for addresses on the United States by a large variety of groups ranging from high schools to business and professional clubs.

Newspapers asked for interviews on the United States, and, in two instances, I was asked to broadcast on the radio. One of them was a short wave program beamed to the Arab nations to whom I talked about the University of Missouri. All students and teachers were able to repay the United States Information Service of the State Department for the many services it gives to them by assisting in some of its programs for building a better understanding of the United States abroad. Professor Waidelich, for instance, taught electronics at Fouad I University until the revolution forced the university to close, and then he went on a lecture tour to engineering and science groups in the Near East.

The values of this program to the United States are many. American teachers, students, and researchers abroad help to bring a large number of non-Americans an accurate understanding of American civilization and progress. It reaches the same end by bringing foreign students and professors to American universities. In the less developed regions of the world it helps to introduce American skill and technology that strengthens the defenses of these areas against poverty, disease, and totalitarian ideas. It gives American students an opportunity to study under world famous foreign scholars. Still more important, it familiarizes students and teachers with the culture and civilization of non-American lands, increasing their understanding to the point where they can give better leadership in all areas of policy.

What's Wrong With Our Team?

Have you heard this question recently? Let's do a little research, lay some cards on the table, and call our hand.

First of all, pre-season statistics proved to everyone that the Tigers would be outmanned physically in every one of their ten contests this year. We were waiting to see how they would react. Would they play hard, tough football in spite of such a disadvantage? Would they be easy prey for such stalwarts as Maryland, California, S.M.U., Oklahoma, Kansas, and Colorado? Or would they give these pre-season favorites a scare and possibly upset a stronger power? In other words, would they play the type of football that we, as spectators, would like to see regardless of who won the game.

MISSOURI

Alumnus SPORTS

Scanning the sequence of past games, one factor stands out as a single weakness. The inability of the Tigers to push across that last ten yards and reach pay dirt. Three times in each of the first four games the Tigers knocked on the goal line door, and felt it slam shut in their faces nine of those twelve times. So many people have asked, why?

It is really a very simple question to answer. Remember our first observation? Outmanned in every contest! Why, then, you ask are they able to penetrate several times to the five yard line? Because inside the ten yard line the whole game changes.

Why run? Why not pass over such a close, tight, tough defense? Sounds easy doesn't it? Well, brother, that's the toughest spot on the field to consistently score via the pass route. What's that? You forgot about the end zone? That's what makes it so tough. There they are on the four yard line, only four yards for six points and what makes it worse, their pass receivers have only fourteen yards in which they can maneuver. It's just like trying to score against a fifteen-man team, because that out of bounds behind the end zone becomes the best secondary a defense can have. If you're a doubting Thomas who has been second guessing a coach who has one of the shrewdest offensive minds in the country by saying he ought to pass or use the spread down on that goal line, may we make a suggestion? Let's dig up some factual information showing that other teams have consistently been able to offset a physical handicap through the use of such plays inside the ten. If we could find it, our fine coach, as well as every other coach in the country, would like to know about it; and, if we can't find it, perhaps it would be better to admit that the best effort has been put forth and those in the game and on the bench know a little more about what the best possibilities are.

What's wrong with our team? Not a thing. In fact, if we have any pride in our program, our staff, and our team, we will recognize the fine play of the Tigers as truly a tribute to everyone concerned, and in spite of overwhelming odds, they have been a credit to us through the year.

They will Remember

These eight Tigers pictured in your sports section will lead their teammates into the annual Tiger-Jayhawker gridiron clash on November 22nd. To every Tiger athlete this contest is the climax to his collegiate career. Somehow, a victory over the Jayhawkers can erase whatever bitter taste their efforts have left in the past. This is the day when unknown individuals rise to an occasion they may never have equaled in their career, the day when tension is so great it makes every other game seem like grade school. Yes, it is a great day, one which has seen more upsets than any other. It means so much to everyone. But to these seniors, it means even more than to anyone else. Our memories of this game will haze in the years to come, but never to these seniors. They will never forget their mistakes or achievements, win or lose it is a day they will never forget. It belongs to them.

M. U. TRAINING Agriculture

Teachers of vocational agriculture are an important group of University faculty. Their work in public high schools is compensated for the part by state funds. The curriculum for teachers graduate is administered by the Department of Agriculture and the College of Education. Courses include a minimum of 12 months of agriculture and 20 hours of student teaching in outlying areas.

Persons admitted to the Department of Vocational Agriculture must have had experience in farming or a grade average of M for the last two years. There are 250 schools in Missouri that offer vocational agriculture and 10 percent of the students in the Department of Agriculture are graduates from these schools.

During the past year 12 teachers of vocational agriculture were employed on the 12-months basis, including courses in agriculture, including courses in high school and offer courses to high school and adults who are not required to have a high school diploma.

Aside from undergraduate work considerable emphasis is given to in-service training in the Department of Vocational Agriculture at the University. One hundred and thirty majors in agricultural education were registered in the Graduate School in 1951-52. Some of the graduate students enrolled for courses by extension, with the others registered in residence during the school year or in the 1952 summer session. Thirteen students qualified for the Master of Education degree during the year.

Non-credit short courses and workshops make up an important part of the in-service training for teachers of vocational agriculture. Ordinarily these are held out in the state and deal with such subjects as tractor maintenance and repair, land appraisal, use of concrete, electric welding, sheep shearing, safety education, and the preparation of visual aids. Representatives from the Department of Agricultural Education and the State Department of Education make arrangements for these activities and schedule outside help where specialists are needed.

Three persons make up the staff in agricultural education. G. F. Ekstrom and C. V. Roderick handle the course work. Joe Duck serves as a teaching aids specialist and helps with the short courses and workshops.

The production of livestock is an important part of the home experience received by students of vocational agriculture. Frequently these projects form the basis for herds of cattle, swine, sheep, or poultry. The boys in the picture at the right are judging animals to improve their ability to select dairy cattle.

Farm mechanics shops are provided by schools maintaining departments of vocational agriculture. These shops are about 40 x 60 feet in size and are equipped with hand and power tools. Forging and welding are among the phases of instruction given in the shops. The boy at the left is acquiring skills which will enable him to make repairs on farm machines and to improvise small items needed on his farm.

Economical production is stressed in farm mechanics. Frequently it is more practical to repair an item than to construct a new project. Suffice it to say, the shops are popular and provide means whereby students develop mechanical skills essential to success in farming.

Farm carpentry is another important phase of instruction in farm mechanics. Skills acquired in carpentry enable the students to keep buildings in repair and to construct projects such as gates, feeders, hay racks, and small buildings. The boys in the picture are building a farrowing house to be used with a swine project.

THE MYSTERY OF TRIPOD

Many inquiries come into the Alumni office about that well-remembered campus figure, Tripod.

We are pleased to report that he is hopping from white campus to red and back again with his usual appeal and agility. Wherever students are gathered together, there Tripod is to be found. Indeed he is always expected, and he never disappoints.

A poster summoning to a recent pep rally before one of the games announced that everyone would meet at the Tower at seven, and that Tripod would certainly be there as well as Pogo.

But Dr. Fred McKinney has raised a question that ought to be answered; how does Tripod keep on doing it? He was running around here, the same appealing little campus mutt twenty years ago when Dr. McKinney first set foot on the campus.

"But" asks Dr. McKinney, "is he the same little dog who greeted me so warmly then? Or does someone who knows how hard it would be for us all to get along without this unique little campus figure, find another dog like him and prepare him for the role when the current Tripod has earned his rest? (Gruesome thought)

"Or perhaps the Columbia dogs elect a little dog to fill his place. In that case, just how does Tripod lose his leg?"

MISSOURI ALUMNUS HEADS SCHOOL

Paul J. Thompson, '14, one of the early graduates of the School of Journalism, saw his dream come true last month when he dedicated the $635,000 Journalism Building at the University of Texas, where he has taught journalism for 33 years and now heads the School.

The establishment of the school has not been without its difficulties, indeed the journalism courses were all thrown out of the university by one governor, and Prof. Thompson had to teach in the Business School until a new governor was elected.

For the dedication of the building, the principal speaker was Dr. Gainza Paz, famous Argentine editor of the suppressed La Prensa.

Thus another student of Dean Walter Williams has spread his gospel that journalism is a profession and that the best possible education must be provided for it.

RADIO? No comedians, news, symphonies, dance bands, no radio—without electricity.

TELEPHONE? Electricity carries your voice along the wires and rings the bell.

X-RAY? The X-ray itself is actually a special kind of electricity—and that's no rib!

MOVIES? Electricity makes 'em move and talk, and even keeps the customers cool!

How many of these need electricity?

You're right. All these and many more. For electricity has become so much a part of our everyday life . . . that we take it for granted. We seldom realize how many uses we make of electric service, how often we use it, how much we get for our money. Yes, its many time and labor-saving devices make life easier and more enjoyable. And, best of all, good electric service is available to almost everyone . . . at low cost.
