Students who visited the campus on the seventh annual University Day generally did not appear as concerned and forlorn as the three young men pictured on the opposite page—and it's doubtful this trio actually felt that way; our photographer just happened to catch them in a reflective mood. In reality, the visiting students gave the impression that they were rather enjoying themselves, as indicated in the photos above, and were genuinely interested while taking in the sights and getting information about the University.

They—high school seniors and junior college sophomores—had good reason to make the most of their one-day visit, for the object of the event was to encourage them to continue their education and to introduce them to what University life will be like.

The day's activities were arranged to give the visitors an excellent view of the campus, where many of them may be returning as University freshmen or juniors. Guided tours took the guests to the University's fourteen schools and colleges.

The visitors heard some of the University's top administrators and met many of the faculty members. They were welcomed at the opening assembly in Jesse Auditorium by Chancellor John W. Schwada. They heard short programs by the University Band and the University Singers. At a special conference for parents, University personnel answered questions about housing, scholarships and financial aid, job opportunities, academic requirements and extracurricular activities.

Success of the activity has left no doubt of its value, according to University officials. It promotes a better understanding of the significance of higher education and a wider interest in planning wisely for a college career.

What has become an annual custom at the start of a new school year is the Alumni Leaders Conference, a gathering of volunteer workers in the University Alumni Association. The occasion has a variety of offerings. It is a good time for alumni active in behalf of the University to get acquainted or renew acquaintances. It is a time when fresh information about the University, its growth and needs, is imparted. It is when accomplishments of the Alumni Association are reviewed and objectives for the coming year are set forth. Fellowship of the occasion, which begins with a coffee hour in the Alumni Lounge of the Student Union, is continued at a luncheon and at the opening football game of the season.

The host at the luncheon and the game was President Elmer Ellis, who spoke briefly at the luncheon and introduced the new Chancellor of the University, Dr. John Schwada, who discussed aspects of the State University System.

The Chancellor told the guests that the University has made tremendous progress and that its potential is greater than ever. He said the tendency is for larger numbers of graduate and professional school students to come here while research in all fields is strengthened. But he stressed that "there will always be freshmen" coming to the Columbia campus and that there should not be any downgrading of a strong liberal undergraduate program. Dr. Schwada said it is important that all four campuses of the University be supported by all graduates of the University and all citizens of the state.

At the business session in the Student Union auditorium following the coffee hour and preceding the luncheon, the speakers were the new president of the Alumni Association, William C. Tucker of Warrensburg; Guy H. (Bus) Entsminger, Assistant to the President for University Development and Alumni Affairs; and Jean J. Madden, field director of the Alumni Association.

In sketching the program of alumni activities for the coming year, President Tucker said: "We need to sell to our fellow alumni and to the people of the state and nation a whole new concept of the University of Missouri. We need to be well enough informed to discuss with pride this new structure and its advantages, to answer charges and criticisms, and to pave the way for the rather overwhelming financial needs, both public and private."

The most obvious way of getting word out to the alumni in Missouri, Tucker said, "is to tell them." He recalled that in 1963 the Alumni Association had 45 meetings involving 88 counties and more than 3,000 alumni for charter night meetings in the state. In 1964, for the University's 125th anniversary program, there were 59 meetings with nearly 6,000 alumni involved during the one-week birthday celebration. However, he pointed out that of the 101 organized counties in Missouri, 18 did not meet for either occasion. The goal for the coming year is 60 meetings and 6,000 alumni to hear the story of the University System. It is planned to have a University representative speak at each of the projected meetings.

In addition to holding 60 meetings during the year, another goal is to increase active membership in the association by 1,500. President Tucker said this increased membership would add further to the effectiveness of the Missouri Alumnus as one means of furthering an informational campaign concerning the University of Missouri System. He said a series of telephone campaigns would be implemented in various localities as one way of increasing association membership. He said a direct mail membership solicitation letter has gone out to all non-active members.

In their talks, Entsminger and Madden reviewed Alumni Association activities and discussed future programs. Entsminger, referring to the University System, said "There is no lack of loyalty to this campus; we have a larger pride in the expanding operation."

It was announced there are 101 organized alumni groups in Missouri and thirty chapters outside the state. This is an all-time high. So is the new total membership of the Association—14,710.

President Tucker presided at his first Board of Directors meeting on the afternoon preceding the Leaders Conference. Judge William Kimberlin of Harrisonville was elected to succeed Tucker as representative of District Eight. The president announced these committee appointments: Athletics—John Logan of Louisiana, Bud McClaren of St. Louis and Don Walsworth of Marceline, who are to join the other 13 members of this standing committee; their chairman is Vic Swyden of Kansas City. Campus Visitation—John Stapel, chairman; Paul Doll, Robert Gardner and Jack Hackethorn. Consulate Committee—Gordon Blackmore, chairman; Dick Chamier, Cullen Coil and Fred V. Heinkel. Membership—B. W. Robinson, chairman; Don Shuey, Robert Dallmeyer, Mitch Murch and Alan Roby. Public Information—Marvin McQueen, chairman; other members to be appointed.

Bruce Jay Friedman,

Author

By Frank Borsky

The author of this interview is one of Bruce Friedman's oldest friends—from the day he arrived on the campus. Borsky, A.B. '51, was an Army combat reporter in Korea; worked for International News Service in the Atlanta, Ga., bureau; was a reporter for the Jersey Journal in Jersey City, N. J. and for the past five years has been a reporter-rewriter for the New York Journal-American. He writes: "Like Friedman, I often recall with pleasure my college days. Missouri was wonderful, wonderful, wonderful."

Bruce J. Friedman, a tall, quick-smiling New York magazine editor, sat in his office overlooking Madison Avenue, sipped a scotch-on-the-rocks and said:

"Go easy on me, Frank. The other interviewers have been pretty kind. I hope I'm not going to get stabbed in the back by my old friend from Missouri."

I assured Friedman that he didn't have anything to worry about. I was not, like most of America's critics, an admirer of his books—but I could recall with pleasure and nostalgia our days together at the University of Missouri.

Out of sheer self-defense, if nothing else, I wasn't going to blow the whistle on some of Friedman's more outrageous capers in Columbia—since I was involved in a few of them.

Friedman, B.J. '51, is the author of a currently best-selling novel, A Mother's Kisses (Simon and Schuster), about a brooding, 17-year-old boy named Joseph who is having trouble getting into college. Through the antic, hilarious efforts of his mother, Meg, the boy winds up at a place called Kansas Land Grant Agricultural.

How closely Joseph is modeled on himself is of course something that only Friedman can say. But Kansas Land Grant is unmistakably the University of Missouri, its foliage blooming, its females as beautiful as in memory, and its Midwestern culture a revelation to the teenager from Bensonhurst, Brooklyn.

"I wanted to go to school in the East but colleges in those days were tight," Friedman recalled. "But I have no regrets now. From a writer's standpoint, Missouri was very good for me. It helped me get away from the East—and most important—introduced me to a culture that was more representative of America than New York. The whole experience was very important for my personality developments.

"Some of the different cultural experiences are dealt with directly in my work. But I don't like to think of my work as geographically based. I think of it as dealing with human relationships. In A Mother's Kisses, the Midwestern college scene is secondary to the human relationships. I'm more concerned with people than with things in my work."

Friedman came out of Missouri to pursue a career as a newspaperman. He never made it—and now qualifies as perhaps the most successful "failure" the University's School of Journalism ever produced.

"The height of my ambition at that time was to be a reporter," he said. "I always nursed a kind of frustration about reporting. But now, as a novelist, I have the chance to do some in-depth reporting for magazines. Right now, I have several assignments and I'm looking forward to them. I look at these (assignments) as a good opportunity to refuel as a novelist."

Far from doing "in-depth" stuff at J-School, Friedman covered such assignments as agricultural conferences. "I was no heavyweight in reporting," he recalled. "I never got my leads right. But I felt I did have a little skill as a feature writer. Actually, I did a lot of weather roundups and I remember writing about the temperature 'dipping down' or the mercury 'taking a dive' a thousand times."

Eventually, Friedman was given the job of doing drama criticism for The Missourian—the assignment he enjoyed most at J-School.

"It wasn't that big a plum," he said, "but it was a lot better than the ag conferences."

I remember Friedman's tour as The Missourian critic very well. In his own mind, he took on some importance professionally for the first time in his life. When he came home from the Stephens Playhouse at midnight, he would sit down in the dining room of the Phi Sigma Delta house at 600 Rollins and carefully bat out his review.

"Looking back on it, I don't think they were very good," he said laughingly.

Friedman was—and is—the pessimist supreme. Whatever he did, he would insist he had done badly. After an exam, for instance, he would moan the blues, and cry: "I didn't do very well." As it turned out, of course, he consistently did very well. His grades were a solid B and he was no "grind," leading a full social life.

But he was not a conspicuous "man about campus" and he candidly admits:

"No one knew who the hell I was."

In any event, there is no doubt that Friedman's experiences at Missouri helped shape his life, and influence his writing. This is evident in the boarding house routines in Stern, his first novel, and in many of the short stories in Far From the City of Glass, and of course, in the college sequence in A Mother's Kisses.

He was never too keen on the fraternity system but it was important to him at the time. "It was an anchor for me, it provided security," he said. "For one thing, Eastern fellows were regarded with a healthy suspicion by Missouri boys. They generally considered us to be outsiders. But then, a writer by definition is generally considered an outsider in any group."

Friedman's career after Missouri began with two years as lieutenant in the Air Force. He was assigned to St. Louis as a reporter with an Air Force training magazine that, he says, "turned into a literary sheet."

In the Air Force he started to think about writing of another type. "I came in contact with people who had writing on their mind and we turned the magazine into something literary.

"And then, I had a kind of shattering experience. I was in an airplane with some kind of lunatic Air Force major. I had the feeling that—well—that he was trying to kill me. He was an authentic psychotic. I was very upset and I didn't know what to do about it except write a story."

He sent this story to The New Yorker magazine, which sent it back with rejection slip asking if he had written anything else they might be interested in. "I didn't have anything else to send them so I wrote another story, 'Wonderful Golden Rule Day,' and they bought it," he said.

Following his Air Force tour, Friedman moved back to New York, taking a job as an editor of adventure magazines with Magazine Management, a firm he is still with.

"I came home and went to the Associated Press and couldn't get a job," he admits. "Some gray-haired man ripped some wire copy from a machine, handed it to me and said 'give me a lead.' Honestly, it looked like a big bale of hay. As soon as I sorted it out, this man grabbed another bale and asked for another lead. I was scared out of my wits. I guess they were trying to see how cool I was. Anyway, they practically threw me out."

At Magazine Management, Friedman fashioned a career as one of the best editors in his field. At the same time he was writing for such magazines as The New Yorker, Commentary, The Antioch Review and Playboy.

Then, in 1962, Friedman's first novel, Stern, was published. Stern, a novel about being Jewish, delicately, humorously and powerfully records the state of mind of its protagonist, a young suburban husband beset by a consuming anxiety.

Stern was hailed as a major work, written by a novelist of outstanding talent and importance. The New York Post said: "At one stroke he has taken his place among the gifted writers of his generation." The New York Times said: "Mr. Friedman's style is a pure delight—supple, carnal, humorous and at times slightly surrealistic." Time magazine said: "A novelist with an antic imagination and a style to match."

Stern was followed by a volume of Friedman's short stories, Far From the City of Glass and, this year, by A Mother's Kisses.

In the months prior to the publication of A Mother's Kisses he was true to form. "They (the critics) are going to murder me," he would moan. "It's the second one—that's the big hurdle." I felt sure the book would be a success. And, of course, it was. The New York Times said about the novel:

"Run, push, play dirty. But get A Mother's Kisses. Meg is the most unforgettable mother since Medea. Meg is heaven and hell jammed into a hammock-sized bra and too-tight girdle.

"She is Theda Bara with a henna rinse, and Molly Goldberg with a plunging neckline . . . synthesizing a Friedman plot is like making a tracing of the Mona Lisa. You can reproduce the shape and dimensions but nothing that reveals the work's unique quality."

The Saturday Review welcomed "the most fabulous mother in modern fiction . . . and at the flick of her tongue she arouses your horror, sympathy, laughter or dismay.

"Friedman is a wild poet of the secret life, one of the funniest of writers, but a dark echo to the laughter that gets painfully close to the bone."

Newsweek said: "The book abounds with brilliant scenes and sufficient comic characterizations to populate a dozen novels, so rich and profligate is Friedman's inventiveness."

college football today

An Exposé of the Exposés

By Dan Endsley

EVERYBODY KNOWS IT. As a means of gaining access to the college graduate's wallet, America's educators have developed a highly effective pocket-picking technique. They simply anesthetize old Joe Alumnus. The narcotic is a game called football—a game which at the college level features systematic brain scrambling by oversized, subsidized neanderthals whose only noticeable involvement in college life occurs on autumn Saturday afternoons. Right?

Wrong. As incredible as it may seem to a generation so often told otherwise, there is relatively little money obtained from college football—either directly in gate receipts or indirectly in gifts from hot-blooded old grads who parade their team's victories as proof of their own virility. And most players are bona fide students making normal progress toward graduation, without benefit of under-the-table aid, either academic or financial.

Muckraking gridiron exposés, from which we get most of our "knowledge" about football as an insidiously corrupting influence in college life, actually date from the 1920's, and most of the "information" is just about that old. Writing exposés has become a major sport in itself, and its most successful participants have been far better remunerated than even the most demanding of All-American quarterbacks. But whether the work of big-timer or small potato, most of these exposés are several college generations behind the times.

Probably the two most persistent myths are these: (1) "Everybody does it" (whatever "it" is); and (2) college administrators, putting money before morality, look the other way as the cash rolls in.

"Everybody" does not do it. More than 600 American colleges and universities have football teams. No more than 10 per cent of these—half a dozen conferences and half a dozen independents—can, in football terms, be considered "big time." Perhaps another tenth play follow-the-leader in recruiting, aid, and scheduling policies. But four out of five do not. They conduct low-pressure, honest, economical, student-oriented athletic programs. Football has not corrupted them, nor will it.

As to the charge of greed-inspired administrative hypocrisy—naïve indeed is the college official who still believes (if he ever did) that there is any significant relationship between alumni giving habits and a school's won-and-lost record on the gridiron. There is even less correlation between football and the really substantial gifts and grants from individuals, industry, foundations, and government. Nor does much money pour directly into the coffers from football itself.

There is hardly an administrator in the land who is not painfully aware of these realities. Even the most successful of bigtime operators hopes, at best, to cover the costs of athletic competition in all sports and maybe that of the institution's physical education program, and still be able to meet the mortgage payments on the field house. The era of building dormitories and laboratories with football money ended nearly a quarter of a century ago.

YET FOOTBALL GOES ON. Even though nearly a hundred schools have abandoned the sport since World War II began, more than 600 others still play the game. Why?

The answer is almost too simple to credit: football is a sport which young men like to play and which Americans of all ages like to watch. That was the game's strength back in the days when President Andrew Dickson White refused to let a Cornell team travel a thousand miles "to agitate a bag of wind," and that's still what keeps it going today.

It isn't the character- or body-building values, the public relations aspects, the money, or even the vested interest of large platoons of professional coaches and athletic directors. It's the fun. This fall approximately 2,000 college football games will be played. At each of these games, whether admission is free or six dollars a seat, there will be spectators. A few of the competing teams will even represent schools

The author, long-time editor of the Stanford Review, is a former sportswriter who gave it up because "it didn't seem a proper career for a grown man"—but he remains unapologetic about his love for sports. The high spot of his own football career came, he says, during World War II while he was a member of a Navy team. It was the day he tackled George McAfee of the Chicago Bears and got a Purple Heart. Not the medal, the real thing.

that have dropped football; the players will be students who, for no reward other than the joy of participation, have themselves organized new low-pressure programs at little expense.

Why such an inherently static and stereotyped spectacle as American football, which puts the rest of the world to sleep, continues to grip the interest and imagination of U.S. manhood is a question for the psychologists; perhaps one must grow up with it to appreciate it. But one thing is certain: it's only a game, and thus is in no way responsible for the asinities which sometimes accompany it.

SINCE THERE IS STILL PLENTY OF NEED for honest debate over the real trends in bigtime college football, the purpose of this article is merely to identify some of them—not attack or defend. Here are a few which tell far more about the State of the Pigskin than the most comprehensive list of violations can ever reveal:

1. Quantitative Recruiting: Because a factor called "desire" means as much as strength, speed, or agility and is impossible to spot for certain in even the most brilliant of prep school sparklers, football recruiters seek the largest possible group of promising prospects. Football coaches at top institutions have a hundred or more grants-in-aid to hand out; if all goes well, a solid 40-man squad will shake down from the larger group. A still new but increasingly popular recruiting device is the "letter of intent," which is supported as a means of preventing "other schools" from badgering a boy who has already made up his mind. This means the school which can get a recruiter there early and cozen the boy into signing a sheet of paper he may not understand can concentrate elsewhere without fear that he'll be pirated away—because he will lose a year of varsity eligibility if he changes his mind. This applies only where specific conference or other inter-school agreements have been made, but there is growing pressure to make its application universal by adopting it as a National Collegiate Athletic Association dictum.

2. Standardization of Reward: "Carrying" a large group of grid hopefuls is an expensive business, even at a large state school where the gate receipts are big and tuition is relatively low; therefore there is strong sentiment for a standard work-aid scale with individual need the governing factor. Occasionally it turns out that a particularly desirable star has been slipped something extra on the side, but most get no more than tuition, books, non-taxing part-time jobs that barely cover other basic expenses, and usually summer jobs at which they must work hard.

3. Exchange of Information: While a coach might prefer to keep his dealings with his own players a secret from his competitors, the only way he can find out what the other fellows are doing is to trade reports. At the recruiting stage everyone knows the educational and other qualifications of all the prospects (and thus who, if anyone, is cheating on admissions standards), but it doesn't stop there any more; in several conferences each school now makes regular reports on every player—the aid he receives, if any, and his record of educational progress. Doctoring these reports is possible, no doubt, but perilous. Nowadays coaches actually get fired for unethical practices, and there are quieter and less drastic penalties which aren't very agreeable either.

4. Insulation of Athletes: Just as skyrocketing enrollments have made it more difficult to obtain admission of boys with high gridiron but low scholastic attainment, they have also exerted a very different kind of pressure on those who are accepted. Today's students have a broader range of values, and while football is still popular, it's several slots down from the top of the list. Since football players are students too, they are often influenced by the attitudes of their peer group—to the detriment of athletic performance; a boy who doesn't consider football all-important isn't likely to play as well as one who does. So coaches seek ways of screening their players off from the rest of the student body. (Some also try to screen them from the press and from participation in other sports.) Such efforts aren't too successful because, even when it strains out insidious influences, isolation only emphasizes the difference between non-athletes and athletes. This puts the latter in the position of paid Hessians whom the rooting sections still cheer when the team wins but whom they are likely to boo if it plays poorly.

5. Quantitative Coaching: Years ago, any team that had eleven good men and three or four capable substitutes had a chance for a successful season. Now only the "three deep" schools have much likelihood of becoming big winners, and injuries have become so common that even some of the most powerful squads are decimated by midseason. Hence a coach wants enough depth to withstand attrition and still be strong enough to wear down the opposition in the third quarter and flatten it in the fourth. The 60-minute player, formerly a common species, is now about as rare as the whooping crane because a fresh reserve is a better risk than a tired star. This dictates a collective approach to coaching. Many more players must be given the kind of attention only the first eleven used to get; thus several different types of drills are conducted simultaneously by assistant coaches who are specialists. The head man supervises, plans, delegates, coordinates. He can't be as directly and personally involved as he used to be because, under present-day conditions, if he isn't "a good organizer" he isn't long for the big time.

6. Mass Tactics: Even the most casual glance at a sports page will verify that there are still individual stars, but it's stardom with a difference. The payoff goes to the team that can concentrate its strength and hit hardest as a unit, the greatest proportion of the time. This requires greater interchangeability of personnel, so the star is likely to be a specialist who plays half or less of the game rather than an all-around man. Success requires waves of fresh men ready to belt with abandon. Hitting hard has always been an important element of football, but emphasis in post-war years has been so heavy that tactics which once would have drawn penalties for roughness or piling on are now admired as "good, hard, clean football." Coaches are no longer thrilled by good individual tackles; they want to know where "the pursuit" was (i.e., why everyone else didn't catch up and pile on); if they can see the ball carrier's jersey under the pile, something went wrong. As the size and ferocity of players has increased, so has the incidence of injury.

THESE ARE HALF A DOZEN of the more obvious current trends in bigtime college football. Whether one approves of them or not, they point in a direction quite different from that so often decried by the writers of exposés: standardization of recruiting tactics and aid policies, conservatism, bureaucracy, orthodoxy—and less rugged individualism. The Organization Man has found a comfortable billet in college football too; in fact, he's running the show. And when he's through coaching he probably won't have to worry about a pay check. Many coaches who have lost their jobs, or tired of them, have moved right into big corporations at excellent salaries.

Of course many old-time college football fans find the game less interesting than it used to be, perhaps because coaches have worked so diligently to achieve perfection: i.e., to eliminate the element of chance. They seek to recruit a manpower advantage and then play it conservatively, grinding it out slowly in "four yards and a cloud of dust." They leave the pyrotechnics to the professionals. Only winning pays off; the crowds in the home stadium will gladly accept dullness if it means victory—and will reject "interesting" football when it's only a synonym for losing. It isn't how you play the game, it's whether you win or lose.

But whether one likes these trends or not, there has been some improvement over the past. In the early '30s it was possible for a boy to be sweet-talked into attending college on a football grant, while still a freshman to be splattered all over the field during a scrimmage with the varsity, and his football usefulness to be ended. Hastily he would be rolled out of school and left to fend for himself—alone, injured, penniless, perhaps a thousand miles from home. A little later, in 1940, I was myself invited to try out for the team of a most respected institution, on a sort of "free enterprise" or caveat emptor basis: the school had no obligation to me if I failed to survive the cut for any reason. (I didn't go.)

Such practices used to be common 25 years ago; now they are blacklisted as unethical and illegal, and any institution or coach caught in the act is in for a penalty that will hurt for years. Whatever football's current sins may be, elimination of that kind of vulturous viciousness can only be considered progress.

PERHAPS FOR ALL TIME, the balance of football power has tipped in favor of the large tax-supported institutions—especially those which have not yet had to face the problem of selective admissions. Private colleges and universities that still consistently rank among the grid elite can be counted on the fingers of one hand, for perfectly valid, natural, and legitimate reasons. Since football squads are larger, the much lower tuition charged by state schools is a bigger advantage than ever before. Since these massive state schools have far larger student bodies, they can accept many talented athletes who, though they may meet listed standards of the "prestige" private institutions, are turned down because there are so many other applicants with even higher academic qualifications. And since the public institutions are public, representing entire states, they have far larger constituencies to support them at all levels. Some private schools have met these new conditions by withdrawing from competition; others, by forming their own exclusive groupings, e.g., the Ivy League. Still more choose to battle it out with the behemoths, scouring the entire United States as avidly as they compete for National Merit Scholars.

As to the perennial charge that alumni pressure is to blame for all of football's sins, remember that the season-long sellouts which create pressure to win at all costs are not possible when interest is confined to alumni—and that schools where only the alumni are interested usually have a pretty safe and sane football program.

Joseph Falsetti.

CAMPUS SCULPTURE

One of the newest sights on the campus is an abstract sculpture, "Family Unity," which has recently been installed outside the Stanley Hall entrance.

The seven-foot-high group of three interlocking figures represents a father, mother, and child. Although there are several monuments and stone pieces on the grounds here, this is apparently the first sculpture specifically planned for the campus, and it is believed to be the only one created here. Development of the sculpture began last winter.

Sculptor is Joseph Falsetti, University interior design instructor, but some twenty students also had a hand, literally, in the project.

Members of the Student Affiliate Chapter of the American Institute of Interior Designers began more than a year ago to raise funds for a gift to the University's School of Home Economics, of which the interior design program is a part.

Students held a Christmas bazaar with original gifts they made. After Falsetti's sculpture had been selected, the students assisted with preparation of the interior plaster cast. They also helped Falsetti in sawing apart the 1,200-pound group and in hauling each "body" down from the interior design laboratory and out to its position in the courtway between Stanley and Gwynn Halls. The sculpture is pictured on this month's cover of the Alumnus.

A new technique was used in the construction—that of covering the plaster cast with a structural coat of epoxy resin.

Dedication of "Family Unity" took place during Homecoming activities.

Falsetti, a native of Italy, received a diploma from the Ginnasio Superiore, Cleto, Italy, and later studied at Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Ohio State University, where he was a graduate assistant and instructor. He was also an instructor in art in the Columbus public schools. His work has been exhibited in Ohio, West Virginia and Missouri.

While Friedman will not admit the book is autobiographical, it is plain to anyone who knew him at Missouri that the "tall and scattered looking boy with an Indian nose" in some ways at least fits the author. On the pitfalls of writing an autobiographical novel, he says:

"If it's successful, all is forgiven. As soon as an old friend read the book, he called and threatened to sue. He had a healthy walk-on. Then when the reviews started, he called and demanded to know how come the mother was getting all the notice."

"Actually," Friedman said, "A Mother's Kisses wasn't going to be about the mother at all. I wanted to write about a certain kind of melancholy atmosphere that seemed to me to exist in the forties—and the book was supposed to begin where it now ends, with the boy in college. But, in the writing I found that I wasn't interested in college."

Friedman is "coasting awhile," but he has his next book firmly charted. It will deal with contemporary issues. "A Mother's Kisses represents the period before Stern," he said. "The next book will be what happens after Stern. It will address itself to contemporary issues—the loneliness that exists in certain circles—and the frenzied activity not dealt with effectively in contemporary novels."

On the personal side, Friedman married Ginger Howard, of Clayton, Mo., shortly after he left service. They have three sons, Josh, Drew, and Kipp, all of them, Friedman jokingly says, were named after bit players in the late TV movies. They live in Glen Cove, L. I.

Despite his writing commitments Friedman does not intend to leave his post with Magazine Management.

"The job is stabilizing," he said. "With all the fuss about the book I find this so. I have always been successful at being a schizoid."

"During the day it's magazine work. At night, usually between 11 and 1 a.m., I write. And I find the job and writing not entirely incompatible. If I had a whole day of yawning, I'd be a mess. I don't ever intend to just write novels. To my way of thinking, the ideal career is to write books, stories and stay abreast of the times. I'd like to do an original film and flirt with the theater."

It seems that Friedman will get his wish. He has several assignments from leading magazines, an original film assignment, and an option on his book for a Broadway musical and possible Hollywood movie.

His world has changed. He is sought out. He has grown in depth, dimension and stature. He is without doubt one of the most important men of letters to come out of Missouri—and at 34, he ranks among the top writers on the American scene. But to me, an old classmate, Bruce Jay Friedman has not changed—except for a receding hairline. He is the same "tall and scattered looking boy with an Indian nose" that arrived on campus in the fall of 1947.

And he wears his success as casually as the battered brown shoes, checkered sports jacket, wine-colored tie and brown chino pants he used to sport around the campus at Ol' Mizzou.

Once again St. Louis alumni have enjoyed a successful "Night at the Opera." Here is a portion of the crowd on a tour backstage of the Municipal Opera—that's a stage setting in the background. The alumni saw "The Sound of Music" production. Elmer Richards was in charge of tickets.

Named assistant to president

The title of G. H. (Bus) Entsminger has been changed from Director of Development and Alumni Activities to Assistant to the President for Development and Alumni Affairs. In making the announcement, University President Elmer Ellis said Entsminger will continue to direct both the development and alumni programs for the Columbia campus. He explained that while Entsminger will also be available to assist officials on the other University campuses when needed and to coordinate efforts to the best of all concerned, each campus will continue its own development and alumni programs.

University Development is a program to encourage grants, bequests and gifts for support of various University programs, including scholarship, student aid, and research. It receives and processes all gifts to the Columbia campus. One of the activities under University Development is the Alumni Achievement Fund through which thousands of alumni by their individual gifts strengthen scholarship, student aid and other educational programs.

University Club's project

Faculty members have become accustomed to seeing University buildings spring up all around them in the last decade, and now a considerable number of faculty and staff members are interested in having a new building of their own. The proposal has had the attention of several officers of the University Club and will continue to occupy them for some time.

The proposal is for the erection of a building on an excellent tract of high land adjoining the University's A. L. Gustin Golf Course on the south side of the Outer Loop. The University Club, which now has quarters in the basement of Read Hall, is expanding its activities with a view to developing interest in this major project which admittedly will require the support of a large number of persons. Committees are now at work on building plans, financial needs for construction and maintenance, and membership. Interested persons outside the Club will be given an opportunity to share in making the building possible.

Last year a questionnaire sent to all staff members of the University brought about 600 replies which indicated a great amount of interest in having a restaurant, swimming pool, reading and game rooms, tennis courts and other recreational facilities, and meeting rooms.

Present officers of the University Club are: Paul W. Mathews, president; Robert S. Daniel, vice-president; Jaun E. Bauman, secretary-treasurer; Edward B. Etheridge, James L. Craigmile, Donald Lindberg, Clara L. Myers, and Paul W. Schmidt, board members. The Club is made up of full time members of the instructional, research, administrative, and library staffs of the University. It is expected that some others will be eligible for membership with the proposed expanded facilities.

Prof. Mathews said a new building would serve in a number of ways to bring together faculty members from various parts of the University, for the exchange of ideas and for recreation. He added it would be a suitable place for the entertainment of guests of the University Club members.

WHAT COSTS

1/3 LESS TODAY

THAN 30 YEARS AGO?

ELECTRICITY DOES! The average price a kilowatt hour is 1/3 less now than it was 30 years ago.

So, if your electric service bill is more today, it's simply because you are using more electricity . . . and the amount you pay is for a two-months' period of time! Divide your two-months' bill by 60. See how little it costs a day to provide comfort, convenience and better living for your entire family!

In the past this department has dealt with signs to be found on the campus. It is a field with unlimited possibilities for comment and there is not much hope that we can ever record all the signs and do justice to them. A roving camera that takes pictures of snapshot quality has provided glimpses of three of these notices. Of course you recognize our friend Ringo at the top. In the center is a sign from the old house on Missouri Avenue that served until recently as headquarters for the Peace Corps unit on this campus. The wording has the ring of truth in it; these thumbs tried the bell and these fists tried the door; the sign was honest and to the point, although the "We're Here!" statement is no longer accurate, since the Peace Corps now has quarters in Whitten Hall. Luckily for posterity the sign at the bottom of the column has been preserved on film but otherwise is non-existent; while it lasted it caused some eyebrow raising by passersby. All of which was uncalled for, inasmuch as this co-educational arrangement has girls on one floor and the boys on another floor, and never the twain shall meet. Oftentimes signs placed in campus buildings appear to be a trifle wordy. In the coffee break area of Jesse Hall basement there was for a long time this plea on the wall: "Your cooperation is solicited in keeping this area clean. Before leaving please place cups in receptacles near entrance." Not bad for an essay, but by the time its contents have been digested, one's coffee grows cold. The wordiest of all signs was a hand-lettered job which the Aids and Awards Office found helpful at registration. It began: "Wait! Please Read This—All of It—Before asking questions of the receptionist." There followed explicit paragraphs on scholarships, loans, and jobs. The sign ended with: "Now—If there are additional questions, please ask the receptionist. Thanks." We have never actually seen this next sign, but a lady reporter has brought word that it is placed in the powder room on the second floor of Jesse Hall. It may be a bit verbose, but you have to admit it is rather elegantly phrased, as you would expect a powder room sign to be. In part, we are told, it reads: "Please Cooperate in Keeping This Rest Room Clean and Orderly. All wastepaper and cigarettes should be placed in the proper container provided for their disposal. Be sure your cigarette is not burning when you dispose of it. Do not smear lipstick on furniture and walls. Do not burn shelves or furniture with cigarettes." Some mischievous types might wonder if it's permissible to burn the shelves and furniture with some kind of fire other than a lighted cigarette. Finally, if there should ever be another fire in Jesse Hall and someone is in the building, we hope he never encounters this sign which is on a wall between the third and fourth floors, for he will surely perish:

WARNING: IN CASE OF FIRE DO NOT USE THIS WEST STAIRCASE (UNLESS FIRE IS ON 4TH FLOOR)
USE EAST STAIRCASE

SILENCER

His business is quiet. He's a General Motors development engineer and his job is to help see to it that every GM car operates as smoothly and quietly as advanced technology and human skill can reasonably achieve. His work takes him into an anechoic chamber at the Milford Proving Ground where walls made of glass-fiber-wedges up to a yard deep absorb 99 percent of the sound made by a car in operation.

In this room GM cars are "road proved" on a chassis dynamometer under many driving conditions and at varying speeds. Every significant noise, no matter how slight, is studied, charted, evaluated. Object: quiet. This man and others like him never stop striving to reach that goal.

Highly refined laboratory setups like the Milford anechoic rooms contribute vitally to the constant improvement of General Motors cars. But they would be valueless without the knowledge and experience of the men who use them. People, after all, are the key to the continuing excellence of GM products. General Motors owes its position in industry to the dedication and ability of a great many exceptional people.
