Petrus Camper was a Dutch physician, naturalist, anthropologist, paleontologist, sculptor, and patron of the arts. His fame rests on the invention of the facial angle: the degree of protrusion of the lower face. He tried to classify human races according to their geographical origin. Camper also believed that we could decipher people’s characters by measuring their faces.