Johann Caspar Lavater was a minor Swiss poet, writer, polemist, and proponent of physiognomy. A Protestant pastor, Lavater believed in the interaction of mind and body, which led him to the opinion that spirit influenced man’s physical features. Though almost forgotten nowadays, he gained a European renown by creating a theory that attempted to explain human character through physical appearance. Lavater had significant influence on his contemporary, Franz Joseph Gall.