J-Schoolers Meet in Taipei

Some alumni from the School of Journalism had an impromptu reunion in Taipei last summer when Henry Misselwitz, BJ '22 and his wife visited Kan Lee, BJ '22, on a visit there.

Those attending the gathering at Taipei's Ambassador Hotel included C. J. Chen, BJ '24, former editor of the Hankow Herald, now freelancing with the China Post; Hsin-ya Ma, BJ '36, director of the Central News Agency, former Chinese Ambassador to Panama, and president of the Taipei alumni association; P. C. Chao, BS BA '34, general manager of the Bank of Communications, and Kan Lee, BJ '22, deputy governor of the Central Bank of China, who arranged the meeting.

Misselwitz and his wife spent five months aboard the Oriental Esmeralda last year, traveling around the world. He is a former reporter for the United Press, covering the Kuomintang Revolution in 1929, and the White House under the Hoover administration. He was also a screen writer for MGM, freelancer, and for 13 years editor of the San Carlos Enquirer. He has written four books, including The Dragon Stirs. On campus, he edited the Savitar and was a member of the staff of the original Showme magazine.
