

Alumna Doesn't Need Liberation

Kay McReynolds McKemy, AB '46, doesn't need women's lib. She just needs more hours in the day to complete all the projects she loves — projects which include teaching college, authoring books, serving as wife, mother, housekeeper for an 11-room dream house, gardening, reading, needlework and knitting.

Wife of James S. McKemy, BS BA '43, a business executive, she is the mother of two children and teaches at Westchester Community College near their home in Armonk, New York.

She recently spent two years completing her first novel, Samuel Pepys of the Navy, a biographical piece geared to 12-18 year olds based on the diary of the famous Englishman of the Restoration period. This past summer she worked on her next novel, concerning the life of Lord Byron.

Most of her writing must be done during the summer because of her teaching commitment. However, she is firm on her rule: "I write first and clean, cook and shop afterwards. My family and friends know my schedule and for the most part respect it."

Her first publication was in the Journal of the American Dental Association — a piece entitled "Lord Byron's Tooth Powder." She also has had children's poetry published and helped to found a literary magazine on her campus.

The McKemys were married shortly before her graduation, and relocated around the country several times. She worked in public relations and then got her master's degree in English from Columbia University. She has also taught at Briarcliff College.

An avid reader, she finds that pastime hard work. "I'm watching for author's style, plot devices, characterization. When I read a news magazine, I mentally store items to use in the classroom, to make composition and literature relevant to the students."

No wonder Kay McKemy sighs: "I wish there were 30 hours in the day instead of 24."
