Faculty delve into program review issues

Faculty Council's executive committee brainstormed with the provost and the chancellor.

The Monday meeting with Ron Bunn and Barbara Uehling focused on a timetable and process for reallocation, said council chair and political science Professor David Leuthold.

The group discussed how program discontinuance would affect the timetable. Discussion of the process included consideration of forming a task force and "expression of concern by Faculty Council members for substantial involvement by faculty," Leuthold said.

Last week, the council approved a dozen program evaluation principles, which will be presented to the Board of Curators' long-range planning steering committee Feb. 25. To establish priorities for enhancement, maintenance, reduction or elimination, a review of programs and activities on each UM campus and in central administration is to be completed by Oct. 15.

Faculty Council recommended:

- ✓ Decisions on whether to eliminate programs because of duplication should be made before program reviews begin.
- ✓ All administrative and non-academic functions should be reviewed for possible reduction or elimination.
- ✓ Funds resulting from program elimination or reduction should remain on that campus.
- ✓ Funds resulting from reductions at UMca should be reallocated to the campuses or used to augment the funding of designated "programs of eminence."
- ✓ Curators or the president should designate the approximate dollar amount to be generated by each campus and UMca through reductions and eliminations. The percentage of reduction should be similar for each.
- ✓ Budget units, such as academic departments, should be reviewed rather than degree programs.
- ✓ Evaluation criteria should be identical for all academic programs and for all non-academic programs.
- ✓ Evaluation categories should be substantial increase in funds, no or little change, substantial decrease and elimination.
- ✓ The evaluation process leading to possible elimination should follow the Board of Curators' Policy and Procedure Statement.

✓ Procedures to aid employees and students affected by program reduction or elimination should be established.

✓ Evaluations should use current data from on-going program reviews when possible.

In other business, Interfaculty Council representative Marie Vorbeck, professor of pathology, reported that the house committee on education and transportation has recommended a 1984-85 appropriation of $187 million for UM. The governor has recommended $174 million, and the Coordinating Board for Higher Education, $202 million. This year's allocation is $167 million, but a $3.3 million withholding was announced in December.

Vorbeck also reported that Rep. Ken Jacob of Columbia has introduced an amendment to House Bill 1314 that would require the CBHE, in consultation with schools, to develop rules for transferring credit.

In addition, the council noted that the CBHE may require certain high school courses for admission to Missouri public colleges. The council's student affairs committee will review the proposal.

Details stack up

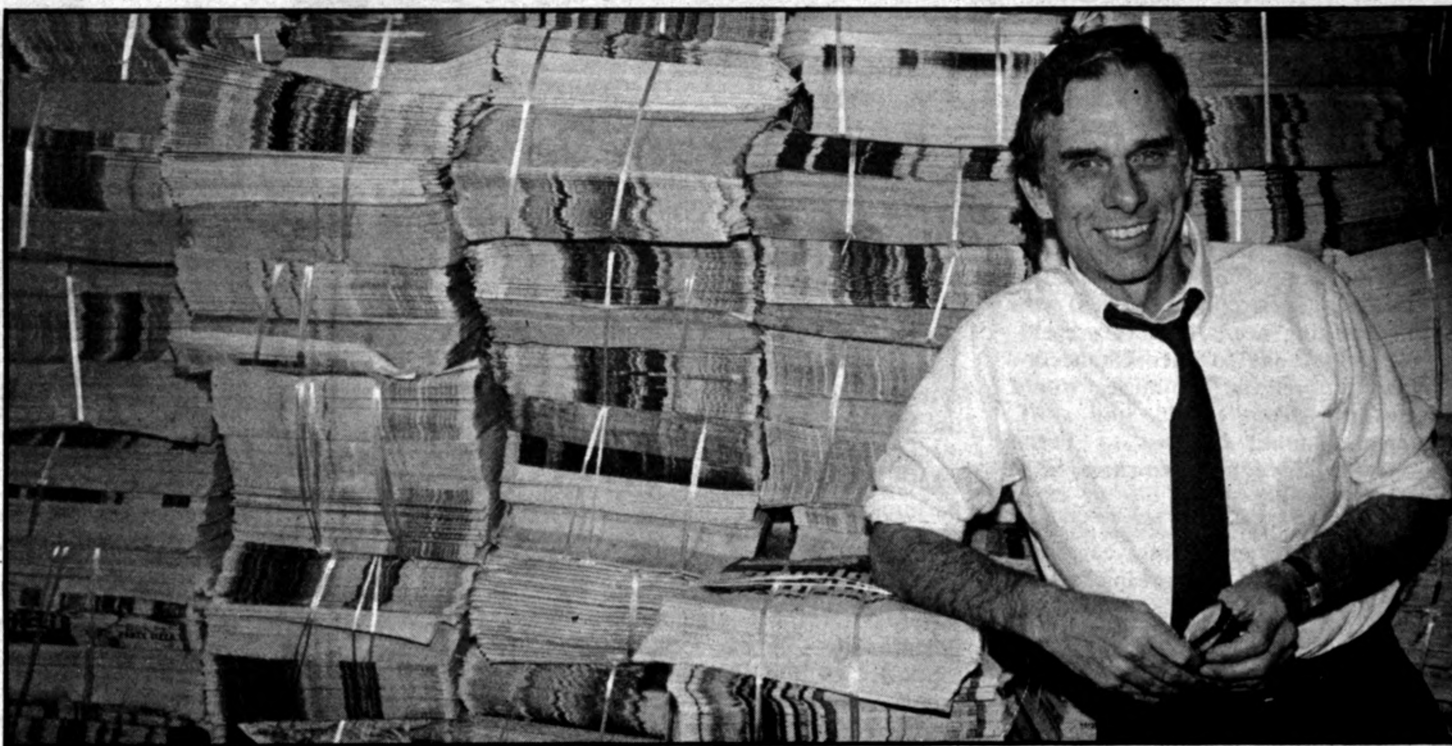

Being dean is a "different kind of hectic" than working at Time magazine.

"The change is a dramatic switch," says James Atwater, former Time senior editor who became dean of the School of Journalism in November 1983.

"There are more details, more challenges in a broader kind of way. At Time the focus was on a small number of stories and people. Here the issues range from financing, personnel, the state of the buildings and courses," he says.

As dean and spokesperson, he needs to put the school's best foot forward, but he's more familiar with the role of the journalist, being an observer in the background. Still, he is happy with his decision to come to UMC and his new administrative challenges.

Atwater sees a variety of ways to strengthen the school, but until the current budget crisis is solved, he may not be able to implement his ideas. "We have the same basic problems as other schools on campus. We should be receiving more funding; things are stretched as much as possible. I'm in awe of the work that faculty members do here."

Journalism Dean James Atwater faces a bundle of new challenges at UMC.

A partial solution to the money shortage, he says, is to raise funds from private sources. "I've been in touch with some corporations already."

There's one thing at the School of Journalism that won't change. "We want to maintain an emphasis on the basic skills of writing and reporting techniques." Real experience, whether on the Missourian, television station KOMU or KBIA radio, is central to the school's foundation and is what makes the program so good, he says.

The Gourman Report, a recently published study by National Education

Standards, rated the Journalism School's undergraduate program best among the more than 1,000 universities it ranked. "It's impossible to judge a school in one flat ranking. It's like a horse-race ranking." He adds, however, that he's flattered by the school's high marks.

Atwater began his journalism career in 1950 as an editorial trainee at Time magazine after his graduation from Yale University. He also worked on the staff of the Saturday Evening Post and Readers' Digest and wrote Big Ten football stories for Sports Illustrated.

In his later years at Time, Atwater wrote the National Affairs section and served as senior editor. He produced 25 Time cover stories. In addition, he wrote or co-wrote three books and is currently writing another.

While at Duke University in 1981 as senior journalist-in-residence, Atwater taught a writing course designed to show how to write short stories about complicated subjects. He found his Duke experience rewarding and plans to teach more writing courses while at UMC. "Scratch any journalist and you find an educator," he says.

PROJECT CREATES CAMPUS ENTRANCE

Latest progress on the city's Flat Branch redevelopment area plan will provide a highly visible, principal northwest entrance to campus, says Duane Stucky, vice chancellor for administrative services.

The Columbia City Council Monday approved extension of Elm Street from Sixth Street west to Providence Road. The street will curve slightly south toward Providence Road and intersect Providence roughly between Locust Street and Stewart Road. The first 100 feet of the extension will be a two-way divided street with a landscaped median.

The street location will eliminate a residence-hall parking lot at Sixth and Elm streets. "We're working on relocating that lot to an alternate area," Stucky says.

MYSTERY UNRAVELS: VIETNAM PLAY WINS AT NATIONAL

"Eleven Zulu," a play written by alumnus Sean Clark and directed by Associate Professor Weldon Durham, has won the American Theatre Festival competition and will be performed at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., April 4 and 5.

Dealing with racial hatred and retribution, the play "Eleven Zulu" evolves around the murder of an American soldier in Vietnam.

The mystery is among eight plays chosen to be performed at the center. A total of 476 plays were entered in the national competition.

Clark's original play also has won the Michael Kanin Playwright Award, given annually for the outstanding new play in the country.

MIZZOU APPROVES NEW TICKET POLICY

A new ticket policy for priority seating in Hearnes and Memorial Stadium rewards Tiger fans for loyalty and financial support.

The policy awards points in a variety of categories, including faculty or staff status, number of years as a season-ticket holder, service to MASA, membership in the Alumni Association and MASA contributions. The number of points determines seat location.

The level of contributions to MASA determines the number of tickets that may be purchased in the priority area.

For details, request a ticket-policy brochure from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, P.O. Box 677, Columbia, Mo. 65205.
