University of Missouri-Columbia Feb. 20, 1987

Campus map

Inside this issue is your copy of the new campus map. A limited number of free copies, compliments of Printing and Records Management Services, will be available to departments after March 2 at copy centers in Jesse Hall, Whitten Hall, University Hospital and Clinics, Lewis and Clark halls, and Veterinary Medicine Complex. Departments that need a large number of extra copies should call Printing Services at 882-7801 before March 2 to place their orders.

One sticker or one tag?

Parking committee makes recommendation to offer both hangtags and stickers.

Responding to faculty and staff requests, the parking and transportation committee at its Feb. 12 meeting approved a parking permit policy recommendation that would allow faculty and staff members to choose between a bumper sticker and a hangtag. The recommendation has been forwarded to Norman Moore, vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services, and the chancellor's staff for review and final approval.

lor's staff for review and final approval.

If the recommendation is approved, it will go into effect Sept. 1, 1987. Parking and Transportation Services will order a shorter, generic version of the current hangtag. Next fall employees may choose to have their parking sticker adhered to the blank front of the hangtag, or they may place the sticker on their car bumper. Only one permit will be issued for each employee.

Even if the policy is approved for next year, it will be reviewed in 1988. "We may have to come back and revise it next year if the policy is abused," said Jim Joy, director of the parking office.

The committee also recommended that once the new parking garages open, a department controlling an official or government vehicle should pay to park that vehicle in a garage or a parking lot where the demand for spaces is greater than 75 percent of the lot's capacity. The recommendation excludes emergency vehicles and includes a provision that would allow departments to petition the committee for special consideration. There would be no fee to park an official vehicle in a lot where spaces are readily available. The recommendation also pends approval by the chancellor's staff.

Campus Facilities already has spaces reserved for some of its vehicles in the new parking structures. The department will pay rent on those spaces and for maintenance shops that will operate from the structures.

The recommendation followed the presentation of a University Police survey that tracked the number of official vehicles parked in lots. "There are a lot of official vehicles on campus. That can become pretty significant in terms of the total number of cars on campus," said Chief Ron Mason. "There could be from none to 22 official vehicles in a lot. The question is if it's dead storage or if those vehicles are being used. If it affects your ability to park, it begins to matter."

The committee acknowledged the need for official vehicles to be parked close to the building for a department that uses the vehicle frequently. "I question if we need all those vehicles around just for errand running," said Dixie Lenau, manager of Stenographic Services. "I understand the need for some official vehicles, but there are some government trucks out there that never move."

Joy described the official vehicle recommendation as "something to work with. If it doesn't work, we'll fix it."

STATE APPROPRIATIONS BY CAMPUS

Campus' share of funds from state holds steady

Separate studies examine distribution of state money among University campuses and compare increases among state institutions.

The distribution of state appropriations among the University campuses has been stable for a decade, reports interim Chancellor Duane Stucky. Every year since 1978, the Columbia campus has received about 44 percent of the total University appropriation. University Hospital and Clinics' share has hovered around 7 percent.

UM-Kansas City has received approximately 18 percent, UM-Rolla and UM-St. Louis about 11 percent each, and central administration about 8 percent.

In the current year, the University has budgeted for a $240.66 million total state appropriation after a 3 percent withholding. Of that amount, the Columbia campus is to receive $107.4 million, or 44.6 percent; University Hospital, $15 million, 6.2 percent; UMKC, $44 million, 18.3 percent; UMR, $28.3 million, 11.7 percent; UM-SL, $25.8 million, 10.7 percent; and central administration, $20.2 million, 8.4 percent.

In another study, the Coordinating Board for Higher Education compared state appropriations for the 10 public four-year colleges and universities in Missouri. From fiscal 1983-86, the University had the second-lowest percentage increase in state funding, 20.7 percent. Central Missouri State University received the smallest increase, 19.7 percent.

The low ranking is due in part to how the coordinating board computes its funding recommendations, explains James McGill, UM vice president for Administrative Affairs. The state agency makes funding recommendations for Missouri's public colleges and universities.

Some of the CBHE's funding formulas use different factors for certain schools. For example, the CBHE recommends 6 percent expenditures for the University's physical plant, compared with 7 percent for all other schools. The coordinating board reasons that because the University is large, it can operate its physical plant more efficiently than other schools, McGill says.

As another example, the CBHE recommends a percentage increase based on each school's instruction budget. But the CBHE calculation does not include money spent on off-campus instruction, which is about $10 million at the University. Therefore, the percentage increase on the University's base budget is lowered. However, the University does recover from fees much of these costs. Unlike the University, other schools have virtually no off-campus instruction, so they receive increases on virtually all of their instruction base.

In the student-aid section of the funding formula, the CBHE has provided an incentive for the regional colleges and universities to raise tuition, McGill says. The goal is for tuition to cover approximately one-third of instructional costs, which is already the case at the University. The formula generates increases that represent a percentage of the school's tuition. This results in a smaller increase for the University, which has had the lowest percentage fee increase among four-year state schools from fiscal 1981-87.

Still, the formula may have some benefit to the University, McGill says. "As fees at regional schools come closer to the University's, students may not put as much weight on the price difference when choosing a college."

Faculty meeting agenda set

The budget, benefits and facilities-use guidelines are on the agenda of the winter semester general faculty meeting. The meeting, which also will include an open forum for discussion, will begin at 3:40 p.m. Feb. 25 in Allen Auditorium in the Arts and Science Building. Refreshments will be served at 3 p.m. in the building's foyer.

Interim Chancellor Duane Stucky will discuss the faculty's role in planning and budgeting, and the status of the current and future budgets.

Staff benefits and the retirement program will be the topics of James McGill, UM vice president for Administrative Affairs.

The facilities-use guidelines discussion will focus on anti-apartheid protests that included the building of shanties on Francis Quadrangle. The guidelines prohibit such structures, but on Feb. 12 Stucky asked that protesters not be arrested "as long as constructive discussion is under way." He also has asked Faculty Council and the student organizations, government and activities committee to review the guidelines.

OLD TREES TELL GREAT STORIES

Rich Guyette can tell you where to find a 1,061-year-old red cedar, the oldest living tree in Missouri. But he probably won't.

Guyette, a research associate in forestry, fisheries and wildlife, keeps the tree's location a secret because he's afraid too many curiosity seekers will hurt or kill the fragile tree.

In determining a tree's age, Guyette takes tiny core samples from wood and matches the tree rings with the chronologies of trees of known ages. Then he uses computers and complicated mathematical equations to discover the tree's age.

In one project, Guyette used these techniques while working with Osmund Overby, professor of art history and archaeology, to date the French colonial houses in Ste. Genevieve, Mo. They've been able to document the vertical log tradition from 1790 to 1873.

In another project, Guyette examined weather during the past 300 to 400 years by studying ring patterns of old trees around the state. Several rings close together in many trees is a sign of a long drought, for instance.

Appropriately, one of Guyette's favorite pastimes is creating pen-and-ink drawings of trees. "A gnarled old tree is a beautiful expression of form, and it gives perspective to our own 'short' lives," he says.

VIDEOTAPE SHOWS LIFE AT MIZZOU

A new videotape for prospective students has been developed by the student recruitment task force. "Experience the Pride" focuses on a day in the life of a community of learning, says Chris Koukola, assistant vice chancellor for University Relations.

The 10-minute tape shows scenes of campus life, closing with the University Hospital and Clinics' Flight for Life helicopter taking off from Francis Quadrangle.

Koukola says the film emphasizes academics, and what Mizzou, as a major public university, can offer the potential student.

The tape will be distributed to every Missouri high school and other schools across the country. To preview or borrow the film, departments may contact University Relations, 320 Jesse Hall, 882-4523. Copies are available on 16mm film, 3/4-inch videotape and 1/2-inch VHS videotape.

If departments plan to use the tape extensively during visits to other communities, they may wish to buy a copy at cost. Single copy prices are $114 for a 16mm film, $38 for a 3/4-inch video cassette and $27 for a 1/2-inch tape. These prices may drop since University Relations plans to buy copies in quantity.

Examining benefits

Staff Council members review policies for retirement, medical coverage and sick leave benefits.

The future of employee benefit programs lies in plans with more flexibility and individual choice, says Mary Ann Tipton, manager of UM Employee Benefits. Tipton spoke at the Feb. 12 Staff Council meeting.

The question-and-answer session began with Tipton explaining the cash-out option for employees vested in the University's retirement plan who leave the University.

Employees are vested in the University's retirement plan after five years of creditable service.

If vested employees leave the University before age 65, they may opt to defer their benefit until age 65, or they can forfeit all future retirement benefit claims by choosing the cash-out option. Employees may choose the option only if the present-day cash value of the benefit is $3,500 or less. That amount was raised from $1,750 Sept. 1, 1986.

"The theory is that they will invest that money in a retirement program for themselves," Tipton said. If employees have more than $3,500 vested, they will have to wait until age 65 to collect.

Council member Larry Windmoeller, assistant manager of Pharmacy Services at the University Hospital and Clinics, asked if Employee Benefits would adopt a pay-back system for non-utilized sick leave. "There is a keen interest in developing a system for buying sick leave from employees who don't use it," Tipton replied. She said a systemwide committee is studying the issue.

"This is the most liberal sick-leave policy I've ever worked with," she added. "I've worked with companies that have offered more days, but the days have never been carried over from year to year."

Tipton said the University pays $3.5 million in sick leave benefits each year. "When someone is hired, the University overestimates the days that person will actually work because they don't take potential sick days into account. When a person is sick, there is no potential for a contribution that day, but those possible sick days are not considered when salaries are determined. In the end, $3.5 million in salary is paid for no potential work."

When asked why staff members are not offered an early retirement incentive plan like that of tenured faculty members, Tipton said she didn't see the plan as a double standard. "State statues prevent us from extending such a plan to non-tenured employees. As staff members, we don't have tenure rights."

When asked why the University doesn't offer an early retirement program similar to that offered to state employees, Tipton said the University did consider a similar plan, but found it to be too costly. "I don't think the state's employee benefit package is as attractive as ours," Tipton added. "They don't have the same features we do; and while one of their features may be attractive, it doesn't mean the entire plan is."

Council Vice Chair Kathleen Edwards, library assistant II in the Journalism Library, asked why the University's medical insurance doesn't cover routine check ups. "Our plan is designed to protect people against catastrophic loss. We did complete a cost survey to see how much it would cost to add routine exams to the medical plan coverage and found that it would cost $1.6 million. Would employees want to pay for that feature?"

"With 15,000 employees covered by the University's benefit plan, we could never come up with a plan that meets everyone's needs."

Tipton said the hottest benefit issues at this time are educational assistance for dependent children, and coverage for routine and preventative health care.

She encouraged staff members to attend monthly employee orientation sessions, which cover the benefits offered to Mizzou employees. The sessions are held the first and third Wednesday of each month at 9 a.m. in the Education and Development Center of the Heinkel Building.

The council's next meeting will be held at 1:15 p.m. Feb. 26 in S206 Memorial Union. All staff members are invited.

Individual ceremonies to celebrate graduation

A commencement weekend with individual divisional ceremonies is planned for May 15-16. There will be no single undergraduate commencement ceremony.

"The groups consulted—student leaders, deans, Faculty Council and the commencement planning committee—all suggested that a commencement weekend with many ceremonies throughout campus is the best way to celebrate," says Roger Gafke, vice chancellor for Development, University and Alumni Relations. "The chancellor and the provost concurred that this should be tried this year."

Honorary degrees will be presented at the Graduate School ceremony, at which doctoral, masters and specialist degrees will be awarded.

Commencement plans for August and December graduates remain unchanged. As in the past, there will be a single ceremony for August graduates and an array of individual ceremonies in December.

DONATIONS CLIMB 55 PERCENT

Donations to Mizzou were up 55 percent in the first six months of this fiscal year, compared with the same period last year. Gifts increased from $5.8 million to $9.1 million.

The amount given by small annual individual donors was up $200,000. Major individual donors, who gave $1,500 or more, contributed $367,000 more. Gifts from corporations and foundations were up $822,000; estates and trusts were up $924,000; and non-academic miscellaneous gifts were up $928,000.

Central Missourians contributed $2.5 million, more than any other area in the state.

SEMINARS COVER HEALTH, PERSONNEL

A new employee development seminar, "Wellness Lifestyle: Taking Charge of Your Health," will be offered to management/professional staff from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Feb. 25 in the Education and Development Center of the Heinkel Building. The same program will be offered to office staff March 25.

Instructor will be Parris Watts, director of the Total Person Program in Intercollegiate Athletics and associate professor of health education. He will discuss reducing the risk of serious lifestyle-related diseases.

A seminar on "Personnel Policy and Procedures: Getting it to Work" will be offered to office staff from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Feb. 26 in the Education and Development Center of the Heinkel Building. Roger Jett, manager of Wage/Salary Administration, and Charles Hunter, manager of Employment Services, will discuss when to use policies, how to complete necessary forms and processing.

Each seminar is free. To enroll call 882-4859. Supervisory approval is required to complete enrollment.

JUST DON'T WRITE ON THE WALLS

Parents should encourage a child's early attempts in reading and writing, says Stevie Hoffman, professor of curriculum and instruction.

"A parent may be tempted to correct an error, but it is important for the child to feel his or her writing is accepted rather than rejected," Hoffman says.

During reading time, she suggests that parents ask questions about what the child sees in the picture and what might happen next. "Asking inviting questions will make the child feel that mother or daddy really wants to know what the child is thinking and is interested in the child's learning."

Adult day care to be studied

The School of Health Related Professions is studying the feasibility of establishing an adult day-care center in mid-Missouri.

In January, the school received $3,500 from University Extension to fund the six-month project. The project includes conducting a needs survey and community education; studying the feasibility of various sites and facilities; a faculty and staff development program for training in adult day care; and hiring consultants to assist with planning.

Unlike senior centers that primarily are oriented toward socialization, adult-day care centers offer services to maintain and restore clients' well-being, says Richard Oliver, director of health related professions.

"Adult day care fills the gap between senior centers and nursing homes," Oliver says. "Many families have elderly relatives in their home who are fairly healthy but may be frail or on medication and need a little extra supervision."

Faculty and staff members who wish to discuss their family's needs for adult day care may call Oliver at 882-8011.

Ultimately, the School of Health Related Professions hopes to establish an adult day-care center on campus administered by HRP and the School of Nursing. A proposal was submitted to the campus administration in January.

Q. I am a smoker, but I am desperately trying to quit with the help of a hypnoterapist, my doctor and several other means, all of which are costly. This is a financial burden for me. However, none of these methods are covered by the University's insurance plan. Meanwhile, many offices are asking employees to quit smoking. I believe in their right to make that request, but if the University is going to take a stance on non-smoking, why doesn't it do more as an employer for those employees who are trying to quit? If the cost of private help can't be covered by our insurance, how about offering smoking cessation clinics, which many private corporations are offering?

A. Mary Ann Tipton, manager of UM Employee Benefits, describes eligible medical expenses as "necessary and reasonable" charges in the treatment of an illness or injury. There are no provisions for routine and preventive health care.

"We agree that programs such as stress management, weight control or smoking cessation are important issues from a health standpoint. But then we have to question whose responsibility it is to maintain your health."

Beginning May 11, University Hospital and Clinics' Education and Training Department will offer its six-day smoking cessation program, "Stop for Life," campus-wide. For further information or to enroll call 882-3880.

Q. When will the women's showers in the Natatorium be fixed? We've been waiting for over a year now for a decent supply of hot water.

A. Bill Busch, coordinator of the Natatorium, says Physical Facilities tried to fix the hot water problem several times last semester. "The amount of hot water that can get to the women's showers is restricted by heavy lime deposits that have accumulated in the pipes during the past 24 years," Busch says. Physical Facilities will look at the problem again this semester, but the only solution may be to replace the old pipes with new ones. "If that is the case, we'll have to see if funds are available this summer," he says.

Q. The women's shower in the Natatorium has a new floor. Now the drains do not work properly. Will anything be done to correct this situation? It is very unpleasant to take a shower standing in other people's soapy water.

A. The drains in the new floor, installed in December 1986, are very small, according to Bill Busch, coordinator of the Natatorium. "Only the middle drain has been called to my attention as not working properly," he said Feb. 11. "The problem has been reported to Physical Facilities, and I hope it will be rectified within the next 48 hours."

Q. Who paid for the warm-up shirts that the basketball team wore at its Feb. 7 game at Oklahoma? Did the back of the shirt read "Congratulations Orange Bowl Champs" in reference to Oklahoma's football title? And if so, was that to "soften up the home crowd" as one of the announcers reported?

A. The cost of the shirts came out of the basketball budget. The back of the shirt did sport a congratulatory message for the Oklahoma team, but Laura Toy, Intercollegiate Athletics' coordinator for marketing and communications, hopes that people don't overlook the message on the front of the shirt. It said, "Just Say No to Drugs."

"I think the congratulatory message probably defused or at least confused the home crowd," Toy says. "It didn't cost extra to print that message since they were getting something printed on the front. And a message like that never hurts."

"The athletes are very involved in the Just Say No program. The Just Say No message was the intent of the shirts," she added.

Campus Dining unit tempts tastebuds

Little things make all the difference. That's the philosophy at Campus Dining Services. The newly created unit is rising to the challenge of operating the University's food service in Memorial Union, Brady Commons and six campus snack bars.

Mizzou resumed control of the units Jan. 9 after Marriott Co. backed out of a three-year food service contract with the University.

"We're adding fresh fruit as garnish on the cafeteria's salad bar, emphasizing cleanliness and service and trying to brighten up the Hawthorn Room," says Lorraine Kalen, interim general manager. Kalen says those small touches can make a quick impact.

Initial emphasis has been placed on the Hawthorn Room, in the lower level of the union. Prices have been modified and the menu has been changed for the first time in 10 years. The restaurant is open from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. weekdays. A $5.95 Sunday brunch is served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The all-you-can-eat brunch buffet features more than 17 items, including pastries, salads, carved meats, breakfast items, desserts and a choice of beverage.

A committee of five or six faculty members will serve as "mystery tasters" to evaluate service and food in the restaurant. "A faculty member was telling me that he remembered how good University food service used to be," Kalen says. "I said instead of talking about, let's do something about it." The committee will offer suggestions and check to see if service is up to par.

Customers at the Union Cafe, also in the lower level of the union, are noticing the changes, according to Patty Morris, a cashier. "People are saying, 'Boy, service has improved 120 percent.'" The cafe is open weekdays from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.

"People want something they can be proud of and something they can count on for food service that is a cut above the ordinary. That's what we're trying to give them," Kalen says.

Battleship papers sink

The "battleship" term paper is being sunk at Mizzou. In its place, shorter writing assignments are going full steam ahead.

"We need to get away from the 'battleship' papers," says Doug Hunt, who coined the nickname for term papers because of their colossal nature. Hunt directs Mizzou's Writing Program, which emphasizes improving students' writing skills by putting writing back into the curriculum.

Most "battleship" term papers are due at the end of the semester right before finals begin, which can cause students undue pressure, he says. Also, students approach writing a traditional term paper with a mind-set of filling up a certain amount of space, which can lead to redundancy. Finally, Hunt says, if students don't comprehend the course content, they won't be able to write an adequate term paper. By semester's end, it may be too late for a professor to be of any help.

Hunt says that the "micro-theme" paper, approximately 250 words to 600 words in length, is a favorable alternative. It is a weekly assignment in most Writing Program classes. Students write about a specific topic or question related to the course content, and then discuss and critique the papers in small groups. Then each student may rewrite a final draft for a grade.

"Think about the real world," Hunt says. "The micro-theme assignment makes more sense. In the business world, people are asked to write short, clear memos and discuss views in committee meetings. The discipline required to compress information into a micro-theme is really valuable learning. The students' understanding of the issue becomes readily apparent."

Besides indicating if the student is learning, the micro-theme takes less time to read and grade than a "battleship."

"With the micro-theme, there is real business being done," Hunt says.

Task force recommends frosh course

By Ed Kaiser

Implementation of a new, two credit-hour course designed to help entering freshmen adjust to Mizzou and enhance the quality of their first year in college recently was recommended to the chancellor by the freshman experience task force. The task force was one of several appointed in spring 1986 to study different aspects of the undergraduate experience.

The proposed course would contain four universal features as central themes interwoven throughout the semester. These include writing, extra- and co-curricular activities, building the group exercises, and the use of one of several already available textbooks. In addition, three major curricular subdivisions are suggested, including an introduction to Mizzou and its services, college survival and responsible personal behavior. Some of the many specific topics would include learning strategies, time management, value clarification, stress management and goal setting.

Mizzou has had several courses and programs in place for new freshmen for a number of years, but integration among them has been non-existent. The task force proposal was patterned after the year-old, highly successful University of South Carolina-Columbia program, which recently claimed a higher graduation rate for its freshmen participants even though their average on the pre-college SAT test was 72 points less than that of non-participants.

A key feature of the South Carolina program and included in the Mizzou proposal is a required workshop for faculty planning to teach a section of the course.

If adopted, the new Freshman Experience course will cut across divisional lines and be placed under the aegis of the vice provost for undergraduate instruction. It has been recommended that pilot offerings in several divisions be available for freshmen entering Mizzou in the 1987 fall semester.

Kaiser is director of the Honors College and a task force member.

Unpublished Twain work to be featured

English Professor Robert Sattelmeyer unearthed a treasure last summer.

While researching Mark Twain's papers at the University of California-Berkeley, Sattelmeyer stumbled onto an unpublished work by the author. That work is the highlight of Missouri Review's 10th anniversary edition, to be released Feb. 20.

Twain wrote the story late in his career, and it is marked by the dark cynicism typical of his writing of that period. The story revolves around murder and deceit in a marriage between two women.

The Missouri Review, published three times a year by Mizzou's English Department, is considered one of the premier literary journals in the country and has received many honors. The Christian Science Monitor recently named it one of the five best magazines in the country, calling it "one of the most versatile and flavorful of all the literary periodicals."

The publication, run by a mostly volunteer staff and a group of esteemed editors, has a world wide subscription list. It is the only magazine to have short stories reprinted in the three leading "Best-of-the-Year" anthologies—Best American Short Stories, Pushcart Prizes and Editors' Choice—in each of the last two years.

The magazine has gained a reputation for discovering new writers and publishing their work alongside that of already established writers. It also has established some of the most generous monetary awards in the country, including the William Peden Prize in Fiction, an annual award of $1,000 funded by the First National Bank of Columbia.

Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young will appear Feb. 26 in Columbia.

Young to speak at A&S event

Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, former United Nations ambassador, will be the keynote speaker for the 1987 Arts and Science Week Feb. 23 through 27. Young's appearance, sponsored by Arts and Science student government and the A&S dean's office, is set for 7:30 p.m. Feb. 26 at Missouri United Methodist Church, 204 S. Ninth St.

Ted Tarkow, associate dean of arts and science, says the student government deserves most of the credit for coordinating Young's appearance. Since A&S Week falls during Black History Month, Tarkow says the students decided to link their celebration to that of the overall campus.

Other activities planned for A&S Week include an exhibit by Marcel Salinas, who collaborated with Pablo Picasso on many works. He will display some of those pieces at the Fine Arts Gallery and teach some masters classes for Mizzou art students. Tarkow says alumnus Michael Fagin was instrumental in bringing Salinas to campus.

The week will culminate with a reception and banquet at 6 p.m. Feb. 27 at Ramada Inn, 1100 Vandiver Drive, featuring 1987 recipients of A&S faculty awards.

Talks on divestment, free speech planned

The executive committee of Faculty Council has recommended that lecture programs on two topics be held at the University in response to campus protests against apartheid.

Divestment and First Amendment rights will be the topics of the lecture series. The lectures will be funded through the chancellor's office and coordinated through the committee on lectures.

"We want to start a process that will lead to a better understanding of the rights and responsibilities of the University on these two important issues," says interim Chancellor Duane Stucky. "I expect us to benefit from the lectures presented by our own faculty, as well as selected guest lecturers."

Departments and organizations with suggestions for specific lecturers with expertise in either divestment or First Amendment rights should contact the chair of the committee on lectures, Charles Nauert, professor of history, at 882-6662.

In addition, Stucky has asked Faculty Council and the student organizations, government and activities committee (SOGA) to review the current facilities-use guidelines.

"I remain committed to the position that the University of Missouri-Columbia has every right to set the time, place and manner of protest. This has been backed by numerous federal court decisions and is a necessary procedure if the rights of all members of our University community are to be protected," Stucky said.

However, Stucky last week asked for a halt to arrests of protesters building and occupying shanties on Francis Quadrangle, "as long as constructive discussion is under way."

Faculty Council and SOGA will make recommendations to Stucky regarding the appropriate places on campus for the shanty town protest. "They will be looking specifically, but not exclusively, at the question of whether Francis Quadrangle is the appropriate location for the manner of protest chosen by the apartheid protesters," Stucky said.

Stucky urged faculty, staff, students and members of the community to take advantage of several programs already scheduled on campus. Al Price, former president of Boone County National Bank, will speak on his recent visit to South Africa at noon Feb. 26 in S16 Memorial Union. Robert Terrell, professor of journalism, will speak on the U.S. Press Corps in South Africa at noon March 20 in S16 Memorial Union.
