Probable measles case spotted

Student Health Service offers free measles shots to faculty, staff and students.

Hoping to prevent a rash of measles cases on campus, Student Health Service is offering free immunizations to faculty, staff and students under age 30 during April. Shots will be given from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays. The immunization program is offered in conjunction with the State Health Department. There are about 50 confirmed or suspected measles cases in Columbia, the first local outbreak in five years.

In late March, the health department reported that a Mizzou graduate student in the College of Education has a probable case of rubeola, or two-week measles. The student teaches at Oakland Junior High School, where several measles cases have been reported. The student does not live on campus.

According to a Board of Curators policy, all students without valid immunization records on file will be asked to leave campus during a measles epidemic. Students granted waivers for medical, religious or philosophical reasons also will be asked to leave. The policy will not be implemented unless the suspected case is confirmed in a laboratory, which could take as long as three weeks. However, an additional suspected case on campus would provide adequate confirmation to enforce the board policy immediately, says Diane Brukardt, director of Student Health Services.

Students without valid immunization records on file have been sent letters notifying them of the policy.

Rubeola is highly contagious. The University of Arkansas in Fayetteville, for example, had 200 cases in 1986. Possible complications are ear infections, pneumonia and encephalitis. In addition, Reye's Syndrome may occur, especially in individuals taking aspirin. Another type of measles, rubella, lasts three days and does not usually cause complications in adults.

People most at risk of contracting measles are those born after 1957 who have not been immunized; those immunized between 1963-67, because the vaccine commonly used at that time did not give predictable long-term immunity; and those immunized earlier than 12 months of age.

About 2,000 students have not provided immunization records. "Most of these have been immunized but just haven't completed the paperwork," Brukardt says. Students may obtain forms at 225 Jesse Hall, 208 Brady Commons or Student Health Service. Forms must be returned to Student Health Service. Students also may check their records at Student Health Service.

Students who graduated from a Missouri high school might have immunization information on their high-school transcript, since Missouri law requires rubeola and rubella shots for all elementary and secondary school students. But many current students were vaccinated between 1963-1967 and would need a booster anyway. The registrar cannot send a transcript to Student Health Service unless the student requests it.

For students over 30, proof of age is sufficient to comply with the policy. These students may call Student Health Service at 882-7481 and give their birthdate. Almost all people over 30 were exposed to measles as children, but there are exceptions. Ironically, the student presumed to have measles is over 30 years old. "This person may be one of a small minority not exposed to measles in childhood," Brukardt says.

More than half of the 100 people in the student's Mizzou class had proof of immunization on file. Many of the others were immunized soon after learning of the possible measles case.

Symptoms are a runny nose, fever, red eyes and a cough. Some measles patients have aversion to bright light. A rash usually begins on the forehead and ears and moves downward over the chest and extremities. A person exposed to measles may not develop symptoms for seven to 14 days. "People are contagious even before they know they are sick," Brukardt says.

Brukardt urges students, faculty and staff under 30 to get their shots now to avoid long lines. "Most people are in and out in 30 minutes," she says. Pregnant women should not be immunized. In addition, the shots may not be advised for some people with chronic illnesses or allergies to eggs or feathers. With questions about a particular concern call Student Health Service.

Campus link proves vital Residence halls' atmosphere is the key to retaining many of Mizzou's students.

The activities and central campus location offered by residence halls form a link to campus for students who live there. That link may be missing for students who live off-campus. And for some, it may make the difference between staying at Mizzou or dropping out.

Residential Life's 1986 Campus Attitude Survey boils down the essentials of retention to one statement: Get students involved in both educational and campus activities and they will be retained at a higher rate. The campus retention committee, formed in 1983 by Norman Moore, vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services, agrees.

"If a student forms a link to campus through an organization or the residence hall, they feel more a part of campus," says Bruce Storey, a graduate assistant working with the campus retention committee. Storey is the author of the Residential Life survey.

Wellness Week is a popular event in Mizzou's residence halls, says Kim Dude, Residential Life program director.

Kim Dude, Residential Life program director and a nationally known speaker on residence hall programming, says her staff offers more than 700 educational programs a year in the residence halls, and emphasizes a "take care of the customer" attitude.

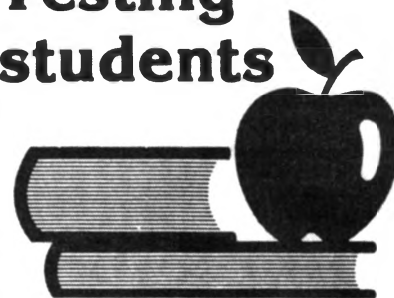

For example, through April 12, Residential Life-Programs hosts the fifth annual Wellness Week. The event, planned by students and filled with educational and entertaining programming, includes a "night-club" featuring healthy hors d'oeuvres and drinks. Last year the students aired their gripes and ideas about life in the residence halls during a weeklong program designed to open communication between the students and administrators.

"Our role is to make the environment conducive to their growth as a student and as an individual," Dude says.

But living in a residence hall doesn't guarantee that a student will stay at Mizzou. The Residential Life Campus Attitude Survey shows why some students don't return to campus. The survey was returned by 375 of the 554 residence hall students surveyed. Those in the survey who didn't return the next year found their classes to be more boring than those who did return, did not plan on graduating in the top half of their class, were disappointed by campus life and the attitude of their professors, had parents who did not necessarily plan on their graduating from Mizzou, and had a much higher rate of thinking about dropping out.

"Students need to have something to identify with besides their classes," Dude says. "Their friends and activities in the residence halls help."

Testing students

An open meeting on student assessment will be held from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. April 15 in S8 Memorial Union. Faculty Council is sponsoring the meeting.

William Turnbull and Nancy Beck of Educational Testing Services will describe the new test of general educational skills they are developing. Next year Mizzou plans to participate in a pilot study of this test, called the Academic Profile Exam.

The test uses a matrix approach to obtain information on skills in reading, writing, critical thinking and problem solving. It also tests the content areas of natural sciences, humanities and the social sciences. The one-hour test includes a 20-minute writing portion. Students' scores on the Academic Profile Exam could be compared with national norms.

"It would be helpful for as many of our undergraduate constituencies as possible to be represented at the meeting," says John Bauman, chair of Faculty Council.

ORGANIZE YOUR DESK MANUAL

An employee development seminar called "Desk Manual Workshop" will be offered to office staff beginning April 14.

The workshop will help participants develop a desk manual for their specific job.

Instructor will be Maureen Smith, coordinator of adult education business courses for the Columbia Public Schools.

The free seminar will be held from 10 a.m. to noon April 14, 16, 20, 22 and 24. It will be held in the Education and Development Center of the Heinkel Building.

To register call 882-4859. Supervisory approval is required to complete registration.

FACILITIES USE HEARING PLANNED

Faculty Council will hold an open hearing on the chancellor's facilities-use guidelines from 3:40 to 5 p.m. April 23 in Waters Auditorium.

Council Chair John Bauman will present a brief history of previous regulations on use of Francis Quadrangle. Speakers will be limited to five minutes, but may return to the floor after others have spoken as time permits.

The council's student affairs committee organized the hearing for discussion and to learn responses to the guidelines, which went into effect Feb. 2. Copies of the guidelines are available in the chancellor's office, 105 Jesse Hall.

SURGERY SPONSORS TELETHON BENEFIT

The Department of Surgery is sponsoring a performance of "Oliver" by the Columbia Entertainment Company to benefit the Children's Miracle Network Telethon.

A special telethon performance will be held at 7:30 p.m. April 17 at the Stephens College Assembly Hall.

If you can't attend April 17, tickets also are good for any of the other performances. They will be held April 16, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25 and 26. Time and location remain the same.

Tickets are $5 and are available in M580 Health Sciences Complex, all Surgery Department divisional offices, Medtique Gift Shop, The Candy Corner, the telethon office and by calling 882-8178.

Of each ticket sold at those locations, $2.50 will be donated to the telethon. The telethon is scheduled for May 30-31.

SAVE ON SEASON FOOTBALL TICKETS

Reduced-rate football season tickets are available to faculty and staff working at least 75 percent FTE.

The special rate is $74.50 for seven home games, a savings of $17.50. Faculty and staff may pay for tickets through payroll deduction; final payment is due by July 31 for payroll deduction.

There are special sections in Memorial Stadium for faculty and staff season-ticket holders. Order early for best seat selection. For order forms call 882-2386.

Reduced prices on men's basketball season tickets for faculty and staff will be announced in late August or early September.

FOR THE RECORD

FOR SALE: Business Services has two IBM 3276-12 Controller/Terminals available for sale. Call Fenfen Chou at 882-7254.

CAMP MUDD TIME: The University "Y" Camp Mudd day camp is accepting registration for children ages 5 through 12. Camp begins June 15 and runs through Aug. 7. The camp is located north of Columbia at Camp Takamina; transportation is provided. Activities include games, swimming, field trips and overnight campouts. For an application or more information call 882-1550. The University "Y" is a United Way agency.

ID CARDS: Faculty and staff ID cards are issued from 2 to 4 p.m. Fridays at Personnel Services, 130 Heinkel Bldg. A handout with ID card guidelines and a list of ID card benefits is available at Personnel Services. Report lost or stolen ID cards to University Police and the Cashiers Office. There is a $5 charge to replace a lost, stolen or excessively worn card. Do not put holes in the ID card.

Lung cancer cure studied

Combined radiation and chemotherapy is the best treatment for most small-cell lung cancer patients, according to research published in the April 9 New England Journal of Medicine.

Michael Perry, professor and chair of medicine, headed the cooperative study, which involved 23 institutions across the nation. The research clearly defines which of several treatment methods has the best cure rate for patients with localized small-cell lung cancer.

"What we have done is come up with a treatment combination that has an increased cure rate and a feasible level of toxicity," Perry says.

"Our study shows that combined radiation and chemotherapy makes a difference in survival rates compared to chemotherapy alone," Perry says. Of the 399 patients studied, those with combined treatment were more likely to have the cancer disappear and less likely to have the cancer reappear in the chest.

The advantages of combining treatments has been theorized in the past, but this study is the first to prove that adding radiation to chemotherapy will improve cure rates for this type of cancer and still keep the toxic effects acceptable.

Each year, small-cell lung cancer accounts for one-third of the new cases of lung cancer in the United States. Ranked separately, it is the seventh most common cancer in the nation with an average survival rate of only seven weeks.

Participants in the study received treatments at one of 23 institutions of the National Cancer Institute's Cancer and Leukemia Group B. The institutions banded together more than 30 years ago to work toward improving cancer treatments. The institutions include the University of Missouri-Columbia School of Medicine, Columbia University, Dartmouth Medical School, Harvard School of Public Health, Massachusetts General Hospital and Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City.

Engineering dean named

Anthony L. Hines, professor of chemical engineering and associate dean for engineering research at Oklahoma State University, has been named dean of the College of Engineering.

In his current position, Hines has administrative responsibility for the development of research at OSU's College of Engineering, including overseeing two research laboratories. He has served as associate dean and professor of chemical engineering since 1983. Prior to that he served as the first chair of the Chemical Engineering Department at the University of Wyoming.

"We are bringing to the College of Engineering a dynamic leader with a proven record," Provost Lois DeFleur said. "This is a major investment in the college and we are confident of great dividends. Hines knows quality in education and he will bring strong leadership to this critical position."

Hines is expected to begin work as dean in August. Cyrus Harbourt, director of Engineering Extension, has served as interim dean since former Dean William Kimel retired July 31.

Q&A

Q. On what level was the decision made to not abide by the city ordinance restricting smoking in public places? Instead of appointing "task forces" to do lengthy "studies of the problem" and generally employing excessive verbiage rather than dealing with the problem, why not a simple "The University will abide by the ordinance?" Countless studies have been conducted already and they show that tobacco smoke is harmful to non-smokers.

A. According to Jackie Jones, associate director of Business Services and chair of the campus smoking policy task force, "It's not a question of at what level the decision was made; state entities are not subject to city ordinances."

Jones says the University and the city work on a cooperative basis on many issues. "But the University as an institution has many diverse issues to consider, including the impact on employees and students, as well as the operation of University facilities such as residence halls, clinics, laboratories, classrooms, offices, cafeterias and arenas. We have to look at the issue from a slightly different perspective than the city."

She says the campus smoking committee was not formed as a result of the city ordinance. "There has been concern about smoking policies on this campus for a long time. An ad-hoc committee of campus offices had been working on the issue and comparing policies at various campus offices and other universities. Although the University didn't adopt the city ordinance when it was passed, that doesn't mean the task force won't agree with it when our studies are complete."

"The task force approach is important. It is critical to the success of the policy that the University community accepts the final policy, and that there is a feeling that all members of the University community had the opportunity to voice their opinion. That's why there is a broad range of representation on the committee." Once the task force is named, Jones says open forums will be held in which employees and students can state their views.

Q. I refer to the March 13 Q&A column in which a question was raised on the reimbursement of medical expenses from the insurance company with respect to the "usual and customary charges."

Unfortunately, I am now suffering from the same situation; I only received 50 percent reimbursement on my previous medical bill. It seems to me that the statement "usual and customary charges" limits the liabilities of the insurance company and leaves the policy holders exposed to the risk of catastrophic medical expenditure. Since we can't exercise any control on charges from the hospital, please advise a positive solution in settling the difference which should be covered by our medical insurance.

A. "Usual and customary charges, also commonly referred to as reasonable and customary, do place a cap on the liability of an insurance company, or in the University's case, its self-insured medical plan, and in fact the remaining liability is shifted to the insured," says Michael Paden, director of UM Employee Benefits.

"Failure to place such limits on a medical plan exposes the plan to charges that are in excess of usual costs. Without 'usual and customary' limits in place, premium costs would increase for both the University and its employees. Currently, employees have the option of choosing their medical service providers. Since 'usual or reasonable and customary' limits are based on actual fees in this area, other providers are available which charge within or below the limitations."

Q. With the approach of warm weather, what precautions will the Power Plant take to avoid brown-outs on the University computer system? PC users need to be warned that there may be a brown-out so they can take steps to save their files.

A. "The electrical brown-outs that the campus experienced last summer were a result of mechanical and electrical failures at the Power Plant," says Phil Shocklee, assistant director of communications in Campus Facilities. "There is no way to predict when that situation will occur and forewarn people on campus. The ongoing modernization and renovation of the University Power Plant will improve equipment reliability and minimize the chance of similar failures in the future."

Q. I was told that white office stationery envelopes aren't acceptable for use in campus mail. Why aren't they?

A. According to Jim Southern, manager of Campus Mail Services, white office stationery envelopes are acceptable in campus mail. "I prefer that they have the words campus mail written on them somewhere," he says. Southern says white envelopes should be grouped with campus mail and should be distinguished from mail that needs to be metered or stamped.
