

MIZZOU WEEKLY

University of Missouri-Columbia

June 12, 1987

Pull out the summer semester calendar that's stuffed inside to relish a long hot summer.

Get ready for shaded parking

University Avenue garage opens, offering 942 spaces in central campus location.

The University Avenue parking structure, with 942 spaces, was scheduled to open June 11, one year after construction began. The Conley Avenue garage is expected to open partially June 15 and be ready for complete occupancy June 30, says Jim Joy, director of Parking and Transportation Services. It will have approximately 705 spaces.

Faculty and staff displaced by garage construction will move to the structures first. They are being notified by letter. Others will move to the garages during the summer as some surface lots close. Relocated parkers may continue using their current permits until new ones are issued in August. To date, Joy estimates that 99 percent of faculty and staff have requested hangtags, and 1 percent stickers.

The Trowbridge shuttle, which has been transporting displaced employees to campus, will make its last summer route June 19. It will resume in the fall as a student shuttle.

At both garages, some finishing touches remain. Until the end of the month, workers will block off from 50 to 100 spaces each night in the Conley garage, where they are putting a stone cap along the top edge of walls. Until the project is finished, cars should not be left in that structure overnight. Meters will be installed on the top levels of the structures before school starts in the fall. This summer students may buy temporary permits for the garages at $10.50 a month or $3 a week.

Landscaping also remains to be done by campus crews. McCarthy Construction Co., which built the garages, included in the project new sidewalks on each side of the structures.

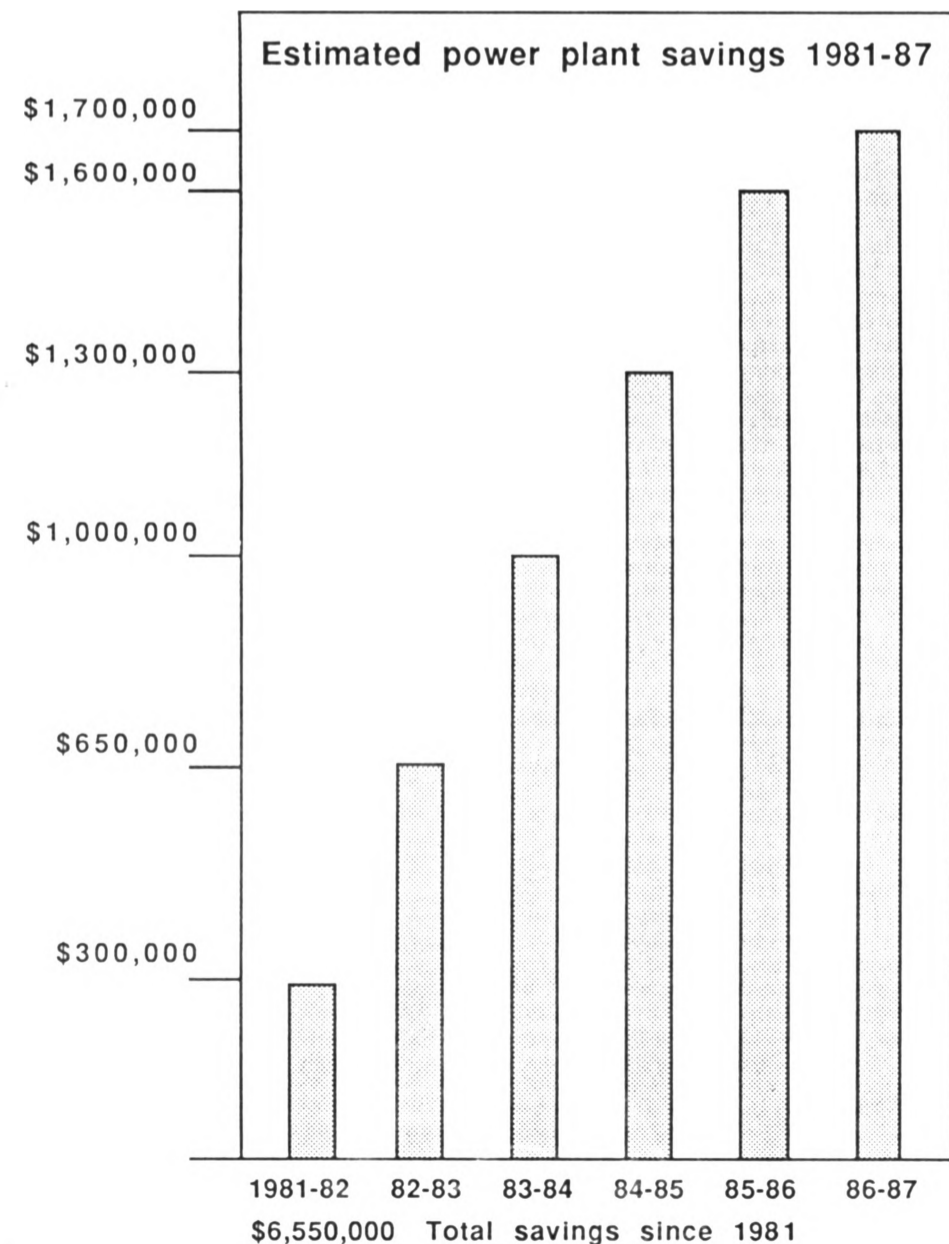

In accordance with the campus master plan, seven surface parking lots are scheduled to be eliminated during the summer. Handicapped-parking spaces near buildings and service drives will be retained. One faculty/staff lot will be converted into visitor parking.

Employees who now park in those lots will be reassigned to the closest available lot, whether surface or garage. Joy says. They will receive letters about their parking assignments several days before the lot closes.

Lots will be closed one at a time, says Bill Ruppert, landscape architect in Campus Facilities. In chronological order, the estimated schedule for lot removal is:

- WC15, east of the Arts and Science Building, will be closed around the middle of June.
- The south half of RC5, west of Hill Hall, will be removed around the first of July.
- WC13, north of the Fine Arts Building, will be closed around the second or third week of July.
- WC6, north of Memorial Union, will be reduced in size and converted to a visitors' lot in the latter part of July.
- WC19, south of Middlebush Hall, will be closed in late July or early August. A new sidewalk running east and west will be built on part of the lot, from the Fine Arts Building to Ninth Street.
- RC8, north of McAlester Hall, will be closed in early to mid-August.
- RC6 and RC7, near Parker and Noyes halls, will be closed in late August.

Power plant boost dims chances of peak alerts

If weather cooperates, peak alerts less likely to happen this summer.

If temperatures don't skyrocket into the upper 90s for an extended period this summer, campus peak alerts — though still possible — are unlikely, says Paul Hoemann, director of energy management with Campus Facilities.

The addition of 10 megawatts of turbine capacity to the University Power Plant late last summer boosted its electrical generating capacity by 40 percent. But the weather must cooperate to ensure that students, faculty and staff stay comfortable in campus buildings and offices.

"Obviously, we hope we don't have any peak alerts, but it's so weather- and equipment-dependent, and those are both unpredictable," he says.

A peak alert is issued when the Power Plant reaches its maximum energy-producing capacity, currently 28 megawatts. Beyond that point, the University must buy an energy supplement from the city of Columbia. To avoid this expense — in some cases, an annual cost of more than $750,000 — peak alerts are necessary.

When one is issued, campus electrical demand is reduced to keep it within generating capabilities through a process called load shedding. The first step occurs in the Power Plant where deep-well water pumps and non-essential electrical equipment are shut off. A small gas turbine also is put into operation to generate additional electricity.

Next, electric-drive central air conditioning in selected buildings is shut down. However, steam-powered air-conditioning units remain in use because their steam consumption allows the Power Plant to generate maximum electricity.

Finally, individual building coordinators are asked to turn off lights and appliances that are not essential for operation. Extra efforts are made to minimize the effect of peak alerts on the University Hospital and Clinics and computer and animal facilities.

Last summer, 10 peak alerts were issued at Mizzou, compared with two in 1983 and 1984, and none in 1985. Nine of the 10 in 1986 occurred in July as a result of extremely high temperatures and several equipment failures, Hoemann says.

By maximizing power generation at the power plant, assuming some additional risks, such as operating without backup capacity, and having peak alerts during high-demand periods, Hoemann says $6.5 million has been saved since 1982. That savings became part of the University's $30 million investment in Power Plant improvements made since 1985.

Because of the improvements, he says, the Power Plant will be producing enough electricity by the summer of 1988 to make peak alerts a concern of the past.

Installation of a state-of-the-art fluidized bed coal-fired boiler will be completed this November. In addition, a 14.5 megawatt turbine-generator will begin to produce electricity in June 1988. When all of the new equipment is operational next summer, the Power Plant will be capable of generating 50 megawatts, he says, more than enough to meet campus needs.

HOOKED ON BASS FISHING?

Get your rod and reel ready for a bass buddy tournament June 27 at Truman Lake. Each boat must have at least one Mizzou employee to compete.

The tournament will be held from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Contestants should gather at the lake's Sterett Creek boat ramp. Entry fee is $40 a boat and $2 for the big bass pot.

For more information, call Danny Bright Jr. at 882-6682 or Don Landrum at 882-8248.

The event is not University sponsored.

FRESH FROM MISSOURI FARMS

Missouri-grown foods and beverages will be featured in "Best of Missouri Farms," a catalog sponsored by Mizzou, Lincoln University and University Extension.

Entries for the catalog will be accepted until June 30. Products must be from rural Missouri and be appropriate for mail order. For a $10 fee, individuals may enter up to five products. For products included in the catalog there is a $25 publication fee.

Application materials are available from county University extension centers. Send applications to "Best of Missouri Farms," 1-98 Agriculture Bldg. For information call 882-9162.

VIDEO TEACHING WORKSHOPS SET

Faculty interested in instructional video may sit in on workshops offered through engineering as space permits.

The workshops, "Get Ready for Video Teaching," will be offered from 8:30 a.m.-3 p.m. June 12 and from 9 a.m.-noon June 16 in 1121 Engineering Complex.

To register, call Virginia Nettleton at 882-3469. There is no fee. Participants may sign up for one or both workshops.

Engineering extension is developing graduate courses for industry to be broadcast in Kansas City. "Video courses will add one more dimension to the graduate courses we have offered in Kansas City for the past 23 years," says

Cy Harbour, interim dean.

A room at the Academic Support Center is being renovated for a video classroom. "The room will be available for whatever reasonable use proposed by faculty and administration," says Gerald Brouder, associate provost.

Harbour notes that video instruction is of interest on all four UM campuses. Representatives of each campus serve on the academic advisory committee for telecommunications, led by Ron Fannin of UMR, and the technical advisory committee for telecommunications, led by Thomas Brenman of UMKC.

Vote opposes racist regime

Fifty faculty members approve resolution opposing investments in South Africa.

Faculty voted to oppose investment of University dollars in South Africa at a called general faculty meeting May 26 in Memorial Union. The resolution, however, does not specifically call for divestment, notes chemistry Professor John Bauman, chair of Faculty Council.

The resolution states: "Because of the concern for both human rights and University investments, we voice objection to the investment of any amount of University funds in the officially racist economy of the Republic of South Africa. Investments in a system that segregates by race its workplace, its educational institutions, its political forum, and even its determination of who is entitled to human rights, are antithetical to the principles of free and open inquiry that characterize a great University." The resolution was sent to interim Chancellor Duane Stucky, who also presided at the meeting, and forwarded to President C. Peter Magrath upon his request.

Fifty faculty members voted in favor of the resolution. There were two "no" votes and five abstentions.

Faculty members petitioned for the meeting to review Faculty Council action regarding divestment. On May 7, the council went on record congratulating the Board of Curators on its limited divestment policy, which forbids investing in South African firms that have not agreed to the Sullivan Principles. But the council withdrew its resolution a week later. "It was a gross error," Bauman said at the time.

At the May 26 faculty meeting, all but two of the nine speakers were from the College of Arts and Science. Don Sievert, professor of philosophy, presented the statement to the faculty.

Also speaking in favor of the resolution was finance Professor David West. "I do not believe that what we do today or on this campus will necessarily have any great effect on either South Africa or the returns on our portfolio. But I do believe that it will have a great deal of impact on what people think we are like — the way we feel, believe and look at people."

Donate blood to save lives

By Larry Windmoeller

Staff Advisory Council will sponsor a campuswide blood drive from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. July 22 in N214-215 Memorial Union. Council members have sign-up sheets and have posted some around campus. Please volunteer. There is a great need for donations.

The total blood supply for all hospitals in Missouri comes through voluntary donations of blood through four regional blood centers. The Community Blood Center in Kansas City and the Red Cross Blood Centers in Columbia, Springfield and St. Louis need to collect 1,800 units of blood each day to meet the needs of patients throughout Missouri. Without blood donors such as yourself, patients could not have many of the medical procedures that have been developed. For instance, we would not be able to provide:

- chemotherapy for treatment of leukemia and other cancer treatments
- bypass surgery
- dialysis
- factor VIII for hemophiliacs
- plasma for burn and shock victims
- blood exchanges for newborns
- life-saving surgery and organ transplants for trauma victims.

In Boone County alone, there are five to seven open-heart surgeries a day that require five to 25 units of blood each. Fifty units a day are needed to treat patients with leukemia and other types of cancer. A major trauma victim may require anywhere from 10 to 200 units of blood. Every 12 seconds someone needs a blood transfusion. The pint of blood you donate could save the lives of six people when you separate the platelets, plasma and other components.

Please take some time to donate a pint of blood. Remember, you must be at least 17 years old, weigh at least 105 pounds, and you should eat some food at least three to four hours before donating.

It takes approximately 45 minutes to donate a pint of blood. That's a very insignificant amount of time for such an important need.

Windmoeller, assistant manager of Pharmacy Services at University Hospital and Clinics, is co-chair of the council's communications committee and is in charge of the blood drive.

Faculty plan would allow shanties

Protest shanties should be allowed on campus, Faculty Council members said May 14 in recommending new guidelines for temporary structures.

The council called for allowing structures that incorporate free speech to be built without the chancellor's permission. Space could, however, be reserved with a permit.

Under the proposal, the chancellor could require removal or impose conditions for certain cases. These would include health, safety or sanitation reasons; issuance of a permit for another structure in the same space; need for the space for regularly scheduled University activities; interference with regular academic and business activities; and threat of insurance cancellation.

Non-University groups or persons would not be allowed to build shanties on campus.

The council also withdrew a resolution congratulating the Board of Curators' limited divestment policy. (See related story on Page 2.)

In other action, the council went on record as being in favor of salary equity. The vote came after the council reviewed a letter sent to campus officials by the status of women committee. The letter included comparisons showing that male faculty, on average, earned more than female faculty in 1986-87. The nine-month salary average for all ranks was $36,039 for male faculty and $28,305 for female faculty. Male faculty also received higher percentage salary increases except at the associate professor rank.

The council heard from Rep. Chris Kelly,

D-Columbia, regarding lobbying and the University budget. Kelly called on President C. Peter Magrath to clarify and enforce the University's lobbying policy.

Kelly criticized "targeted investments" that result in more money for certain programs. "The problem is that we're into some major-league horizontal battles," he said. "It worked temporarily, but it has created conflict that is not good for higher education."

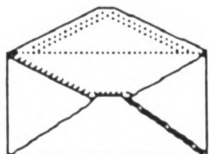

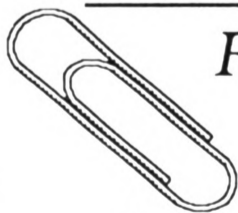

In other matters, the council welcomed new member Douglas Emery, associate professor of finance. Outgoing member Stanley Botner, professor of public administration, received a plaque in recognition of his service to the council.

SAVE TO SEND BABY TO COLLEGE

Parents of newborns would have enough money to send their child to college if they set aside about $100 a month for 18 years.

Robert Weagley, extension family economics specialist, bases this figure on what it would take to send a child to Mizzou for the years 2005 through 2008. Using a 3 percent inflation rate, he figures the cost of a four-year Mizzou education would be about $37,691 in 18 years.

To save enough for college, parents would have to set aside each month $92 for Series EE Savings Bonds, or $102 in a 2503(c) trust account, or $111 in a passbook savings account.

"Savings bonds are a convenient way to save," Weagley says, noting that people can have them deducted from paychecks.

A trust allows you to set aside funds that are taxed at 15 percent rather than 28 percent. However, the 2503s don't revert to the parents. "At age 21, the child could go blow all the money in a 2503(c) on a new car."

To see which savings plan best suits your needs, Weagley suggests talking with an attorney skilled in estate planning.

EXPLORING ADULT DAY CARE

Adult day care will be the topic of a June 12 program sponsored by the School of Health Related Professions. The free program is open to all, including families of those needing care, and health-care professionals.

Participants will learn about adult day-care centers. Questions about establishing a center in your community are welcomed.

Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m. in the Health Sciences Library Gallery. The program will be held in MA217 Health Sciences Center. The session will conclude at 3 p.m.

Smoking attitudes sought

The campus smoking policy task force will develop a survey to smoke out staff attitudes this summer. The task force met for the second time May 7.

The group decided to issue the survey this summer to avoid a lull in its work. At its first meeting, members had discussed issuing the surveys after faculty and students returned to campus in the fall, but the group decided that staff members, many of whom are on campus during the summer months, could be effectively surveyed during the summer school session.

A similar survey for students and faculty will be issued in the fall.

Chair Jackie Jones, associate director of Business Services, met with Professor Tom DiLorenzo, assistant professor of psychology, June 3 to finalize the survey and develop a mailing list. DiLorenzo, who helped the University Hospital and Clinics staff develop its smoking policy, heads the campus smoking cessation clinic funded by the National Cancer Institute.

Automated system keeps track of accrued time

The University's automated sick leave, vacation and personal days system is a potential benefit for employees and departments. Yet only 75 to 80 percent of the Columbia campus is hooked up to the system.

"The system can ensure consistent accrual of vacation, sick leave and personal days. It gives employees a computer printout of their time accrued at the end of each month. And it's not as much paperwork for the person who is in charge of that information," says Vernon Nettles, production analyst with Personnel Information Systems and the system's main spokesperson.

Nettles began his soft sell of the system back in 1983. The St. Louis, Rolla and Kansas City campuses soon took him up on the offer. Today all of the departments on those campuses have a link-up to the system via CICS.

An employee in each department is responsible for inputting the vacation, sick leave and personal days information into the CICS system. Personnel Services retrieves that information at the end of each month and sends out printouts of time accrued to each employee whose department is part of the system. The system also allows Personnel Services to keep accurate files of employees' accrued time.

"If every department entered its employees' vacation, sick leave and personal days information into the CICS system, we would have a complete data base from which to consider changes in the sick leave or vacation program," says Roger Jett, manager of wage and salary administration in Personnel Services.

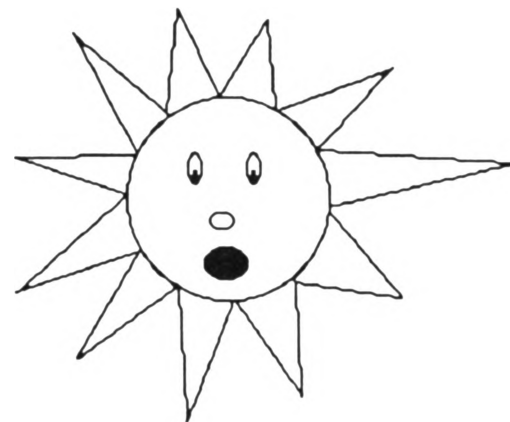

Leona Quick, supervisor of data entry in the Registrar's office, will input data for small departments that can't afford the $100 monthly subscription cost for a CICS link-up or for those that don't have the computer capability. "Most departments that aren't on the system have the capability to be," Jett says.

For information on the system call Nettles at 882-3320.

==> Let's Compute!_

Preserving resources

Most people who make a mark in their field have a single contribution that catapults them into the spotlight. But Thomas Baskett's multifaceted contribution to the wildlife field includes research, teaching and administration. "Apparently," says Baskett, professor emeritus of forestry, fisheries and wildlife, "I was judged to have done them all well."

Baskett is the 1987 recipient of the Aldo Leopold Award. The award is given for distinguished service to the profession and only awarded in years a worthy recipient can be found.

His success comes from his love of the land and his devout crusade to preserve it. "We have to live in the world and use its resources," Baskett says, "but we need to take actions that are least damaging to the environment."

Unfortunately, his philosophy is not shared by the majority. "It's a question of values," Baskett says. "To quote Leopold, 'Some people can live without wild things,' the rest of that thought is that he cannot."

Baskett spent 34 years as leader of the Missouri Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit where he organized and administered one of the strongest and most successful cooperative wildlife research programs in the nation. He spent five years as chief of wildlife research for the Federal Fish and Wildlife Service in Washington, D.C. Under his leadership a landmark decision restricting the use of DDT was made because of its negative impact on migratory birds.

Although he says he enjoyed the technical and administrative facets of his job, "Some of the greatest rewards in my career came from working with graduate students." Over the years there have been 48 of them. "Through my job I have come in contact with university people, government agency people, and I've enjoyed it all. I have probably done what I was best cut out to do."

— Mildred Robertson

"We need to take actions that are least damaging to the environment," says Thomas Baskett.

Hearnes airs new strategy

In 1985 public discontent with scheduling conflicts at the Hearnes Building boiled over. A campus task force was formed to study the problem and to suggest changes in the operation of Hearnes. Among its recommendations was improved communication.

Today Patrick Fitzgerald, Hearnes director since Jan. 19, is doing just that with a marketing strategy designed to reposition the building in the eyes of the public and to encourage more local and national use of the facility.

"The public's perception is that we don't know what's going on in the entertainment/convention business, and we don't care about generating business," he says. Fitzgerald has met with the Columbia Convention and Visitors Bureau and Chamber of Commerce officials to dispel those notions and to hear their suggestions for increased community use of the building. "We want to let people know that we are here and that we want (the building) to be used."

Fitzgerald wants the new marketing plan to create some recognition for the Hearnes Building and the University, to increase business and to generate revenue. "Revenue is not really my No. 1 concern. But it's important in our role as a University facility and as a service to the community that we try to generate as much business as possible."

"The Hearnes Building was operating fine in the past," he says. Hearnes, an auxiliary unit, operated in the black this fiscal year. "We're just going to be more customer oriented. There will be a real emphasis on service."

Fitzgerald, who wants to pull in more music and family entertainment, says competition for shows and conventions is stiff among entertainment facilities, including stadiums and theme parks. "Seven years ago there weren't the number of large facilities that there are today," he says. Fitzgerald says the marketing plan is necessary to recruit more conventions and shows to Columbia.

The marketing strategy at Hearnes includes adding an in-house advertising department to develop ad campaigns for local radio, television, newspapers and the yellow pages of the Columbia phone book. Information booklets about the building have been updated and a new logo has been developed.

The building itself will be spruced up in the coming months. Plans include adding more directional signs, purchasing a portable stage for use by smaller shows in the arena or fieldhouse, and laying a hardwood floor in the practice gym.

Fitzgerald wants to expand intramural use of the building and to extend free-play hours. Hearnes Building guidelines call for the director to schedule events according to the following priorities:

- intercollegiate athletics
- events sponsored by recognized student groups
- building-sponsored events, conferences and special services
- student recreational use
- non-University groups.

The Athletic Department will remain the primary user of the building.

Studying retirement

Keep those cards and letters coming. Retirement survey elicits high return from staff members.

Jim McGill, UM vice president for Administrative Affairs, says he has received more than 1,000 responses to an ad-hoc group's retirement survey of UM staff members.

And he has no one but himself to blame for the increase in mail. McGill asked employees to air their opinions about the University's benefit plans to aid his staff in reviewing the program. The ad-hoc group took him up on his offer and developed the retirement survey in early April. Staff Advisory Council endorsed the survey at its April 23 meeting and mailed copies to Mizzou staff members with at least five years of service.

According to a comparative study done by Hewitt Associates of Chicago, UM ranks about average among Big Eight and Big Ten universities in terms of the value of its benefit program and the University's contribution to those programs.

"Of course, we aspire to compete with the best of the Big Ten schools," McGill says. UM benefits ranked a little below Big Ten schools, and UM salaries are considerably lower than those of Big Ten schools.

Hewitt Associates also compared the University's retirement plan with that offered to state of Missouri employees. According to McGill, the University's plan ranks slightly above the state's overall, although the two vary considerably in their structure.

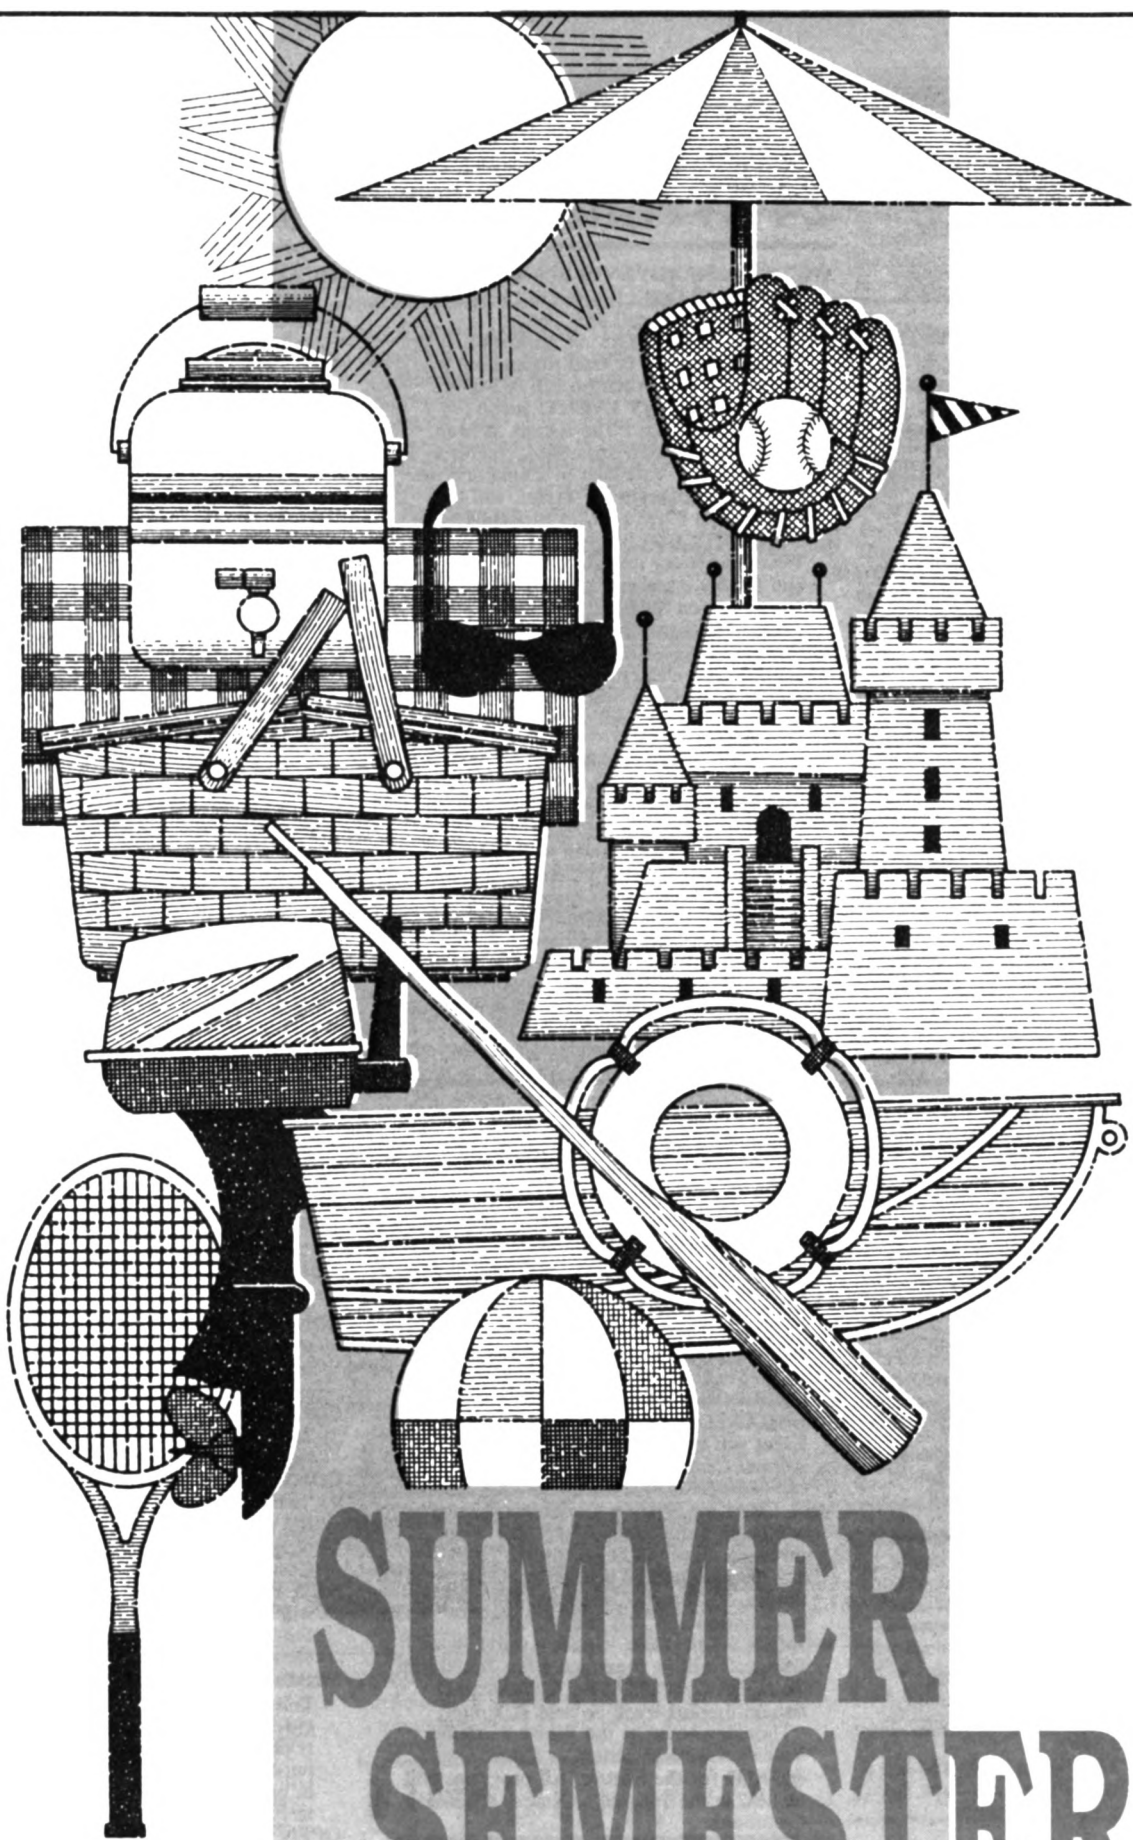

The state's plan has more generous early retirement provisions and uses the highest three years of salary in its benefit formula. The University uses the highest five years of salary to figure retirement benefits. On the other hand, the University's plan is better in that it uses a multiplier of 1.6 percent on salary over $4,800; the state plan uses a multiplier of 1.33 percent. The University's retirement plan also has better benefits for spouses, McGill says.

Common concerns and suggestions noted on the survey responses and in letters McGill has received are:

- better retirement benefits;
- liberalizing the early retirement options;
- tuition waivers for dependents;
- revision of the "usual and customary" fee in the medical plan; and
- more flexibility in benefit choices.

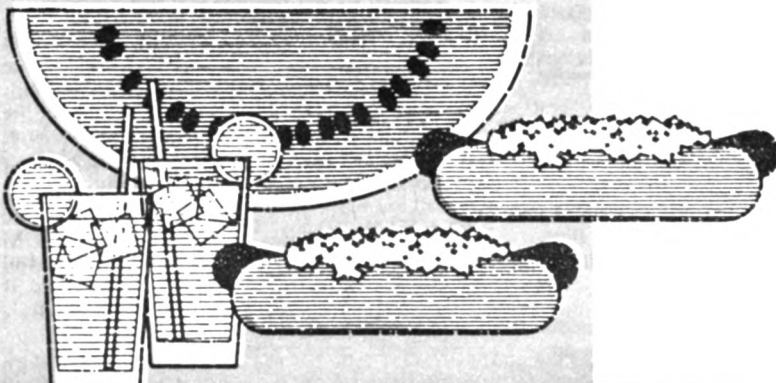

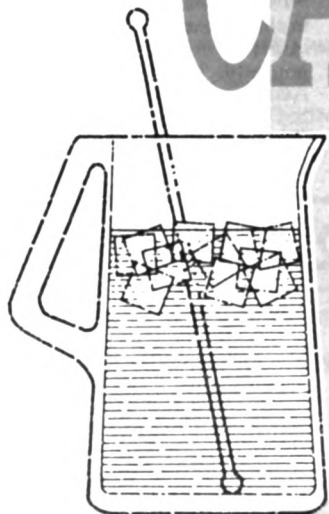

McGill and his staff will continue to review the benefit program throughout the calendar year. A key choice will be between improving salaries or benefits. "Adding a benefit will, of course, cost money. It's a question of whether we should spend that money for salaries or benefits," he says.

Employees who did not receive a copy of the retirement plan survey may send their comments about benefits to McGill at 215 University Hall.

Keeping tabs on IDs

As the first coordinator of Mizzou's identification-card system, John Henrikson fills a void in I.D. administration. He went to work in early May to provide consistent security and maintenance for the system that used to be located in a Jesse Hall hallway.

"Anyone could get to it there," Henrikson says of the system's former location in the hallway outside the registrar's office. The location posed a potential security hazard for the computer-coded I.D. system that grants the card bearer several campus privileges, including access to campus recreation and dining facilities and charge capabilities at campus bookstores. "And it wasn't any one person's job to see that the system ran right," Henrikson adds.

Now the system has an office and a staff of its own. Henrikson and his staff of one, clerk typist II Mae Dickinson, run the new I.D. card office at 13 Jesse Hall. They have responsibility for data security and maintenance, and update the system's records on a daily basis. "On a slow day we'll see 150 changes," Henrikson says. And, of course, they make I.D. cards.

The office is open weekdays from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Faculty and staff may still have I.D. cards made at the Personnel Office, 130 Heinkel Building, from 3 to 5 p.m. Fridays, but the longer hours at the Jesse Hall location may be more convenient for some employees.

Henrikson, who used to work in the business office of Campus Computing, says he'll concentrate on adding card readers at more campus locations in the future. "I can see the system expanding in the future," he says. Possible additions could include an employee charge system at campus dining areas. "You can have up to 99 different activities on this system. We're only up to 30."

UMUW FORM 282 (REV. MAR 84)

Update information on data base for correct phone listing

Employees with new telephone numbers must complete Change of Address for accurate listings.

Keep those calls coming. To help ensure that your listing is correct in the 1987-88 campus telephone directory, follow these steps.

First, be aware that information for the alphabetical listings in the faculty-staff section will be taken from the campus and hospital payroll-personnel data bases.

If your telephone number changed as a result of the new telecommunications system, you need to update your information in the data base. To do this, employees who work at least 75 percent FTE should fill out a Change of Address form, UMUW Form 282 that was revised in March 1984. Use this form to make any additions or corrections to name, office address and phone number, or home address and phone number. The type of form to be used is shown on this page.

These forms are available from General Stores at General Services Building, 882-6906. Columbia campus employees should return completed forms to Jim Robinson, 16 Jesse Hall, 882-6548, by July 31. University Hospital employees should send their forms to Janet Shackleford, 1W41 UMCHC, 882-7912.

Some employees who need to be included in the faculty-staff section might not be in the data base. These include employees who work less than 75 percent FTE; USDA, military, medical or other federal employees; professors emeriti; and others who use campus facilities but are paid primarily from non-University funds.

All departments and offices should send an alphabetical list of employees in these categories to the Publications Office, 1100 University Place, by Aug. 30. This information must be submitted as follows:

For each person, type four lines of data:

- a) Line 1 must contain Social Security number, campus affiliation and employee name (last, first).
- b) Line 2 must contain employee's title and department name.
- c) Line 3 must contain campus address and phone number.
- d) Line 4 must contain home address and phone number if employee wants them listed.

Here's an example.

Be part of anniversary

It only happens once in 150 years, so don't miss your chance to be part of the University's 1989 sesquicentennial celebration.

Faculty and staff are needed to serve on subcommittees, which will help plan sesquicentennial activities. These subcommittees and their chairs are:

- Lectures and symposia, Bill Bondeson, professor of philosophy;
- Performances and exhibitions, Forrest McGill, director of the Museum of Art and Archaeology;
- Special projects, Sandra Gault, associate professor of special education;
- Conferences, Ken Dean, associate dean of law;
- Special events and ceremonies, to be chaired by the director of special events, to be hired soon.

If interested in serving on a subcommittee, contact Roger Mitchell, dean of agriculture, 2-69 Agriculture Bldg. Mitchell is co-chair of the sesquicentennial steering committee.

In many cases, the subcommittees will receive proposals from about two dozen program committees representing University departments, alumni, the community and the state. Volunteers to serve on the program committees will be sought in the fall.

The sesquicentennial steering committee met May 19 at Providence Point, the president's home. Addressing the group, President C. Peter Magrath said, "I regard this as a very important effort for the University of Missouri. The sesquicentennial will fundamentally and substantially focus on the Columbia campus, but it will also be an opportunity to state the case for what the entire University has been, has contributed and can contribute."

Helsel named associate dean

Diana Helsel became associate dean of agriculture May 11 following a national search. She is in charge of the college's teaching programs.

Helsel, who had served as interim associate dean since October, joined the faculty as an assistant professor of agronomy in 1981. She became assistant dean in 1985.

During her tenure at Mizzou, Helsel has won the Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Award, the Elizabeth F. Cooper Faculty of Excellence Award, an Equal Opportunity Recognition Award and the Gamma Sigma Delta Distinguished Junior Faculty Research Award.

Helsel has three degrees from Iowa State University, including a doctorate in plant breeding and cytogenetics. She succeeds Jim Oblinger, who left Mizzou late last year for a job at North Carolina State University.

Swoboda selected as vice provost

Donald W. Swoboda will begin his job as Mizzou's vice provost for extension Aug. 3. He currently is associate dean and associate director of the University of Nebraska Cooperative Extension Service.

At Mizzou, he will be responsible for the administration of the cooperative extension programs and the continuing education programs, and for a faculty and staff of more than 400. Swoboda holds three degrees from the University of Nebraska, including a doctorate in adult and continuing education.

The vice provost position was formerly held by John Oren, who is now serving exclusively as the associate vice president for academic affairs-extension for the University system.

Supporting educational benefits

A systemwide survey to measure faculty and staff support of extending educational benefits to dependents may form the backbone of a plea to add the program to the University benefit package. Staff Advisory Council, which initiated the survey, applauded strong survey returns at its May 28 meeting.

"We're thrilled with the results," said Linda Converse, coordinator of computer teleprocessing in Computing Facilities and co-chair of the council's staff benefits and development committee. At meeting time, 961 of the 1,500 employees selected for the survey had responded.

Currently, the educational benefit can be used by University employees only. After an employee completes a six-month probationary period, the University pays 75 percent of an employee's fees for up to six hours of University classes during fall and winter semesters and three hours during summer session. The staff group is proposing that if an employee is not using that benefit, his or her spouse or dependent should be able to take advantage of it.

Staff representatives from each campus and political science Professor David Leuthold worked together to develop the survey. Leuthold will analyze the results. If the survey indicates that a majority of employees are in favor of the addition, the group will develop a proposal to send to the chancellor of each campus.

The survey asks employees if they have ever used the fee reduction benefit, if they had a spouse or dependent attending a college or university during winter semester 1987, what the chances were that a spouse or dependent would have taken a course at UM if the fee reduction had been available for them, and if they support extending the educational benefit to spouses and dependents.

"Just from what I've seen, I'd say 90 percent of those returning the survey are in favor of the proposal," Converse said.

If a proposal is developed it would face opposition from those who say the benefit would not be equitable for employees who do not have children and, therefore, would derive no benefit from the program. Others argue that since the University actually pays the fees of those using the program, an increase in participants would cost the University additional money.

The staff group argues that the program would provide a benefit for a large group of employees, help retain faculty and staff, increase enrollment at the University, and keep good students in the state.

Barbara Olson Smith, senior secretary in special education and co-chair of the benefits committee, said several employees had called her asking to take part in the survey. "I explained to them that it is a controlled survey, but urged them to write a letter to me stating their support of the policy. We'll add those personal notes to our final data," she said.

In other business, Roger Casadei, janitor in Campus Facilities, said several employees had asked him where they could call for clarification of issues included in the retirement plan survey endorsed by the council at its April 23 meeting. The survey was developed by an ad-hoc staff group after Jim McGill, UM vice president for Administrative Affairs, asked for employee feedback about the retirement plan. Staff members with at least five years of service were surveyed.

Anyone needing more information about the retirement survey should call Employee Benefits at 882-2146.

The council's summertime project will be a July 22 campus blood drive. Larry Windmoeller, assistant manager of Pharmacy Services at University Hospital and Clinics, distributed sign-up sheets and promotional posters. The blood drive will be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in N214 and N215 Memorial Union.

The council will consider the University's medical insurance policy at a future meeting in response to a letter received by Toni Gordon, assistant manager of SameDay Surgery at University Hospital. The letter, which outlined several cardiac rehabilitation programs not covered by the University's medical insurance, was forwarded to Mike Paden, director of Employee Benefits. The council will invite Paden to an upcoming meeting to discuss the issue.

A successful May 14 council meeting held at University Hospital spurred Windmoeller to propose that the council meet at campus departments rather than the Memorial Union. Windmoeller hopes the change will make council members more accessible to employees and will help council members to better understand different campus offices. At the next meeting, members will schedule meetings to be held at their departments.

During the May 14 meeting, the council toured the neonatal and pediatric intensive care units at the hospital and saw a videotape about the Children's Miracle Network Telethon.

Q. In the April 24 Mizzou Weekly, the charts accompanying the minority recruitment story did not indicate the breakdown between men and women in the different employee classification groups. What are the numbers?

A. According to a 1986 Office of Equal Opportunity report on Mizzou's Affirmative Action Program, of the 2,044 faculty members at Mizzou, 1,567 are male and 477 are female. However, of Mizzou's 4,883 non-faculty employees, 3,075 are women compared with 1,808 men.

The break-down of non-faculty employees is as follows:

- executive administrative/managerial, 231 men and 127 women;
- professional/non-faculty, 806 women and 340 men;
- secretarial/clerical, 1,364 women and 100 men;
- technical/paraprofessional, 398 women and 309 men;
