Smoking out new ideas

Campus plan meets little public opposition; advances to administrative level.

Mizzou's proposed smoking policy met little resistance at public forums held April 11 and 12 in Memorial Union. Some 30 faculty, staff and students attended the informal sessions led by Jackie Jones, chairwoman of the smoking policy task force and associate director of Business Services.

There were no major changes suggested for the proposal, which would limit smoking to designated areas in campus buildings. (See March 22 Mizzou Weekly.)

The smoking policy task force, composed of 14 faculty, staff and students, met April 14 to consider revisions suggested at the forums. "I haven't heard any negatives, however," Jones said. The only change made was to add gymnasiums to the list of buildings where smoking would be prohibited. That revision was a request of the campus recreation committee.

The proposal will be forwarded to Kee Groshong, interim vice chancellor for Administrative Services. If the measure is approved by the chancellor's staff, Jones anticipates that a small group of health and safety experts will determine where smokers can light up in buildings.

At the April 12 forum, attention focused on enforcement of a smoking policy. "The key to a successful policy is enforcement," Jones said. "This policy was written in such a way that people should feel they had an opportunity for input. Generally, if a policy is established fairly, people will abide by that rule."

According to the proposal, complaints should be brought to the attention of the appropriate University authorities. If conflicts arise, environmental, health or safety considerations will prevail.

The task force recommends that any proposal not be implemented until certain things are done. "Signs will need to be posted around campus. Resources should be available for people who want to stop smoking, and we'll need to prepare visitors, faculty, staff and students," Jones said. The task force also recommends that the policy not be implemented during the summer, when many faculty and students

Affairs of the heart

Surgeons, patients celebrate 30 years of open-heart surgery at University Hospital and Clinics.

As Thomas Harris sat in a meeting, his heart began to race. Although he did not leave the meeting immediately, he felt something was amiss. And he was right. Harris was about to suffer a heart attack.

Harris' accelerated heart rate and subsequent heart attack could have been fatal. But his story has a happy ending.

Harris, the chief health professions adviser, was rushed to University Hospital and Clinics. He found specialized care that saved his life and may well be credited with sustaining it. He underwent open-heart surgery and eventually received an automatic internal defibrillator implant.

That was in 1985. The defibrillator, implanted by a team of specialists that included Jack Curtis, chief of cardiothoracic surgery; Greg Flaker, director of the cardiovascular laboratory; and Hugh Stephenson, interim dean of the School of Medicine, automatically stimulates the heart when it becomes arrhythmic, or irregular.

Three years ago, University Hospital was one of eight institutions in the United States allowed to perform the implant. "It was just luck that I lived in a community where a teaching hospital was available, and I had this state-of-the-art technology available to save my life," Harris says.

University Hospital and Clinics is celebrating that "luck" by marking the 30-year anniversary of open-heart surgery at the hospital with a visit by an internationally known heart surgeon, Michael DeBakey.

DeBakey will be the visiting lecturer at 1:30 p.m. April 29 at the Hearnes Center. "It couldn't be more fitting to have the world's most renowned surgeon here with us to celebrate our 30th anniversary of open-heart surgery," Curtis says.

DeBakey will make rounds at the hospital at 10 a.m., visiting with heart patients and with former open-heart surgery patients. Paula Seymour Still of Peculiar, Mo., who underwent the first open-heart surgery at the hospital 30 years ago, is among the former patients planning to return for the occasion.

Curtis says the patients give meaning to the research. "We want to provide complete cardiovascular disease health care. We like to think we have all the services covered here."

The care given Harris certainly paid off. In October, irregular heartbeats activated the implanted defibrillator, and the device helped save his life. Harris, still under specialized care at the hospital, thinks University Hospital and Clinics has met its goals.

The Staff for Life Wellness Program says there's a right weigh to go about dieting. Find out for yourself at a new class starting April 21. For details see the Calendar on Page 8.

The committee, composed of smokers and non-smokers, surveyed faculty, staff and students last summer and fall. Survey results and policies at other institutions were considered when the group wrote the proposal. Jones said she will recommend that the policy be reviewed in three years.

Show me your Tiger spirit

Gov. John Ashcroft congratulates some young medal winners during a news conference April 15 in Jesse Hall that officially kicked off promotion of the 1988 Show-Me State Games. Mizzou is host of the games, a program of the Governor's Council on Physical Fitness and Health. Missouri amateur athletes of all ages will participate in the Olympic-styled event. The festivities will be held on campus and in Columbia July 29 through 31. Chancellor Haskell Monroe was on hand at the news conference to offer Mizzou's endorsement of the event.

CAMPUS PREPARES FOR SUMMER HOURS

Departments planning summer hours may spread the word through Mizzou Weekly. Summer schedules will be published in the May 3 issue. Each department should send a note indicating its summer hours to Mizzou Weekly, 1100 University Place, by April 22.

VET COLLEGE HOSTS OPEN HOUSE

Meet Truman the Tiger or take a ride on Missouri mules, Hilda and Louis, at the College of Veterinary Medicine's open house. The annual event, sponsored by students and faculty of the college, will be from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. April 22 and 23.

Planned activities include demonstrations on dog obedience, horseshoeing, falconry, and tacking and grooming horses.

Exhibits such as reptile handling, and tours of the animal hospital, and the petting zoo and nursery also are scheduled. For a complete list of activities call 882-4648.

THE VIEW FROM A WOMAN'S PERSPECTIVE

Women Studies will offer two literature courses this summer. The courses will include the study of traditional and non-traditional feminist literature written by women. A discussion course and a special readings course will be offered. The courses are taught by Robert Bender, professor of English.

Call 882-2703 for more information.

CHANCELLOR AMONG TAPPED INITIATES

Chancellor Haskell Monroe was among five faculty and staff members and alumni "tapped" into honorary societies during the annual Tap Day ceremony April 6.

Monroe was chosen by the Mystical 7. QEBH selected Walter C. Daniel, professor of English and director of General Studies; Parris Watts, associate professor of intercollegiate athletics and director of the Total Person Program; and Joe Moseley, Boone County prosecuting attorney and former Mizzou Alumni Association president. Rod Gelatt, professor of journalism, was picked by ODK.

Taub wins honor for superb work

Haskell Taub, professor of physics, is the 1988 recipient of the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Faculty Research in the Physical and Mathematical Sciences.

Described as an outstanding researcher and classroom teacher, Taub's research is credited with attracting $1 million in external research funds.

Taub was out of town during the April 12 Faculty Recognition ceremony.

Rethink parking

Editor:

As I was unable to attend recent hearings on the campus's master plan, I wish to make this protest for the record.

Without polling the serviced persons, planners have doomed virtually all surface parking lots in favor of more remote garages. What alternative is offered? Can we truly still change the master plan?

If more garages must be built, how about locating one for the many people parking near the geographic center of campus: those who work in or use the Arts and Science Building, the General Classroom Building, Brady Commons, Brewer-Rothwell Gymnasium and the Mathematical Sciences Building and its two annexes.

The northwest corner of Hitt and Rollins streets has been suggested to planners. However, if only one more garage need be built near the future alumni center, then it should be located on the northeast corner of Maryland Avenue and Rollins Street. Please! But we, the University of Missouri-Columbia workers, can't pay for the total cost of these garages, estimated at $600 per car per year!

Q&A

Q. It is the mission of KBIA as a university station to educate. Why, in the midst of the controversy, misunderstanding and ignorance, has KBIA not yet devoted one minute of broadcasting time to AIDS education programming of any kind?

A. "I must be listening to some other radio station," says Margaret Howard, KBIA news producer. She says the station runs National Public Radio's award-winning news reports on AIDS. "NPR was one of the first radio or television networks to cover the issue," she says. Locally, KBIA reporters have covered AIDS policy debates at local school boards and at the state level. "We've also covered the various awareness activities or speakers who have come through town," she adds. Howard says KBIA has not produced general AIDS issue broadcasts "because we feel we can't do a better job than NPR."

"We recognize that this is an important issue, and we're certainly not neglecting it," says Michael Dunn, KBIA station manager.

"But it's not true that we haven't had any programming related to the issue."

Q. Why has it taken so long for the University to flush out the water in Lewis and Clark halls? We got word not to drink the water on Friday, April 1, and were told not to drink it until after Wednesday, April 6. Couldn't this have been done over the weekend? Rumor also has it that there was ether in the lines. Is this true?

A. "A problem with low water pressure in Lewis Hall resulted in a small amount of ether entering the water line from a defective shower mixing valve," says Phil Shocklee, assistant director of communications with Campus Facilities. "Once this was determined to be the problem, this valve was removed. The water was tested and no health hazards were ever in existence."

Shocklee says signs remained on drinking fountains until the water system was flushed and all remaining valves to inactive showers were closed off or removed to prevent a recurrence of the problem. The scope of the problem and scheduling the water outage contributed to the delay.

POWELL GARDENS WELCOMES SPRING

May Day celebrations are planned from 1 to 5 p.m. May 1 at Powell Gardens.

Dancers will perform the English ritual Maypole dances, and a Celtic band will perform the music. A May King and Queen, chosen from children who enter the drawing, will lead the May Day parade around the grounds.

The Gardens will sell bedding plants, vegetable seedlings, herbs and perennials during the celebration.

SCHOLARSHIP NAMED IN GEORGE BROOKS' HONOR

George Brooks spent much of his career helping students meet the financial demands of higher education. Brooks, director of financial aid, will retire after 23 years of service at Mizzou, but his legacy will continue.

Chancellor Haskell Monroe announced at the April 18 general faculty meeting that 30 minority scholarships are to be named in Brooks' honor.

A reception honoring Brooks' service will be from 2 to 4 p.m. April 21 in N201-202 Memorial Union.

HANDING YOU MISSOURI'S BEST

It's not too late to pick up volume two of the "Best of Missouri Hands" catalog. A collaborative effort among Mizzou, the University Extension program and Lincoln University, the catalog is part of the Alternatives for the '80s project.

The catalog offers more than 300 items, handmade by 154 Missouri artisans. Prices range from $2 to $5,000, with most items priced under $50.

To order, send $9.95, plus $2 shipping and handling, to the University of Missouri, 628 Clark Hall, Columbia, Mo. 65211.

STUDENT HEALTH PLANS AVAILABLE

Student Health Service can help students obtain adequate health-care coverage through its voluntary health plan, says Diane Brukardt, student health service director.

Brukardt says many health maintenance organizations do not cover students' expenses while at school, and those that do many times charge a $200 deductible for each illness.

Brukardt asks that departments inform students about the health plan. To receive copies of a brochure that outlines costs and coverage, call Brukardt at 882-7481.

Parking fee plan discussed

A possible parking fee increase was discussed at the April 14 Staff Advisory Council meeting. Jim Joy, director of Parking and Transportation Services, spoke about the future of Mizzou's parking services.

Joy earlier had asked the parking and transportation committee to consider a parking fee increase, and the panel will make a recommendation on the matter this semester. "We have a history of waiting until we need money and then jumping fees up to a much higher rate," said Joy, who acknowledged that his office is not in a financial crunch.

He is suggesting a gradual increase. "A 75 cent increase now wouldn't impact a bi-weekly check in the same way that a one-time $5 increase would," he said. "I'm proposing an increase to $12, not because we need it, but because we're going to need it."

The campus's master plan calls for the replacement of some surface lots with green space, buildings and parking garages. "I need to stay ahead of the game," Joy said. "The master plan affects parking. I have to anticipate that and meet the needs of employees who drive to work."

Council member Frances Williams, chief clerk in Campus Facilities, suggested that parking permit rates be based on employees' salaries. Joy said that had been considered in the past. Other council members questioned why parking wasn't considered a staff benefit. "I have a problem subsidizing capital improvement projects with staff salaries," said Kathleen Edwards, library assistant II in the journalism library. "I think other alternatives should be considered."

Later in the meeting, the council discussed a letter sent to the group by Elias Saab, a member of the parking committee and an associate professor of mathematics. Saab asked the group to endorse a measure approved April 7 by Faculty Council. That group voted unanimously to support a recommendation that calls for a moratorium on parking fee increases and the closing of surface parking lots. Staff Council agreed to invite Saab to an upcoming meeting to discuss the proposal.

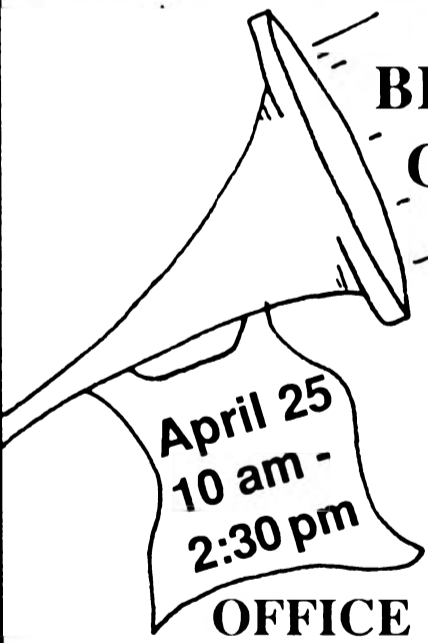

In other business, council Chairman Larry Windmoeller, assistant manager of the University Hospital Pharmacy, reported that Chancellor Haskell Monroe was impressed by Staff Recognition Week events, which were held on campus April 4 through 8. The biggest draws of the week were the health market, which 280 staff members attended, and the fashion show, with 256 people in attendance. Other events attracted an average of 20 people.

The council agreed to endorse the charter of the new faculty and staff benefits committee. The group agreed to the idea at its March 24 meeting. The committee will review all levels of benefits and suggest possible revisions.

Staff Council will ask that a faculty member serve as chairman of the group. At the planning meeting, a coin toss had determined that a staff member would serve in the post, but Staff Council agreed that a faculty person should hold the position. "We want to ensure that the effort gets off the ground well," Windmoeller said. "Since they came to us with the proposal, and because we've got several efforts already under way, it would be best if a faculty person served in that capacity for the first year."

Staff Council will review interest forms to find at-large staff to serve on the committee.

"Red Giant — White Dwarf" and other paintings by watercolor artist Peter Loeb are on display at the Rogers Gallery in Stanley Hall.

Learning from the sky

Instructor-artist Peter Loeb looks to the galaxies for secrets of life, harmony and love.

When Peter Loeb looks toward the sky, he sees more than stars, clouds and the moon. He sees things like unlimited opportunity. Peace and harmony. A design for life. Even love.

Loeb tries to convey those messages through his watercolor paintings, which are on display through April 28 in the Rogers Gallery in Stanley Hall.

"I grew up in the 1950s, when space was an all-important topic," says Loeb, an instructor in design who also is working on a doctorate in housing and interior design. "People were reporting UFO sightings, we were in a space race with the Soviets and there were shows on television dealing with space. My family was living in Chicago at the time, and I used to hang out at Adler Planetarium. I loved it all."

As time went on, Loeb developed other interests. He became fascinated with trains, music and chocolate. "Swiss chocolate is the best. They put a lot of time and care into it." He continued his schooling at various locales, including Germany, as his family kept moving. He decided to pursue a career in architecture, and earned a BA from the University of Houston and an MA from the University of Northern Colorado. He became a licensed architect in Colorado.

But he never forgot the lessons he learned from the sky.

"I've tried painting various things, but have always returned to space," Loeb says. "And at one time I thought of becoming a full-time artist, but the field is too competitive. There are only a few thousand artists out there making any money."

His exhibit, "Spacescapes — the Heavens on Earth," features 14 paintings, all done in traditional watercolor. That means he works without opaque colors or white pigment; all white areas are the white of the paper he uses.

"My paintings are my way of traveling through space, which is something I would love to do," Loeb says. "Every little dot is a world all its own. Taken together, they represent the vastness and wonder of life, the boundless possibilities of it all. Ultimately, they represent love."

He sees a direct tie between this theory and practical design work, such as interior design. "In both, intuition and creativity are essential. Just as every dot in a painting is important, so is every item you place in a room.

"And ultimately, this leads to a new philosophy. If you can make all these elements work in peace and harmony, it will create a pleasant, loving home — a wonderful environment in which to grow up. It will have a profound effect on your life and the lives of all the people who live there."

Awards cite quality work

Do students fall for a natively tailored graduate teaching assistant? Perhaps, jokes Charles Leflar, who wears a suit to teach his principles of accounting classes. But Leflar supposes it was his love of teaching that really won him a 1988 Superior Graduate Achievement Award.

Graduate students from 74 departments will receive the awards at a 7:30 p.m. ceremony April 21 in N201-202 Memorial Union. Graduate School Dean Judson Sheridan will speak. A reception will follow.

Selection is based on outstanding teaching, research, academics and extension. Leflar, 34, is working on a doctorate in accounting. The certified public accountant came to Columbia from Dallas, where he worked for Price-Waterhouse. His research interests include oil and gas accounting.

This is Leflar's first year at Mizzou, and he already has won rave reviews from students. Next year he'll serve as course coordinator for the principles of accounting classes.

The keys to being a good teacher, he says, are to "enjoy it, know your subject inside and out, and enjoy the students." Winners of the 1988 awards are:
