Kicking the habit

Campus and community smoking cessation programs can help employees.

A week before the University's smoking policy went into effect Aug. 22, smokers in the Telecommunications Office tried to snuff their yens for cigarettes.

"Someone mentioned that the almanac said the moon was in the right spot to stop smoking," says administrative associate Kay Frentzel. Frentzel and other office smokers took that as a sign to kick the habit. They have halfheartedly stuck to that resolve, and the University's smoking policy, which restricts smoking to designated areas, is making them more conscious of their efforts.

Whether the impetus comes from family, co-workers or almanacs, the smoking policy may force some University employees who smoke to reconsider their habit. And there are campus and community groups that can help them to quit.

Tom Dilorenzo, assistant professor of psychology, runs the Smoking Clinic on campus. The program is offered periodically, with the next session to start at 7 p.m. Sept. 13 in Noyes Hall. Funded by the National Cancer Institute, the clinic is open to faculty, staff and community members. A former smoker, Dilorenzo stresses that couples who smoke should both enroll in the program. "It's much harder to quit if your spouse continues to smoke," he says.

Participants meet in groups once a week for seven weeks to discuss behavior modification techniques that will help them quit. The program fee is $50, but $40 is returned after participants complete a series of follow-up sessions. The fee can be adjusted. To enroll call 882-6485.

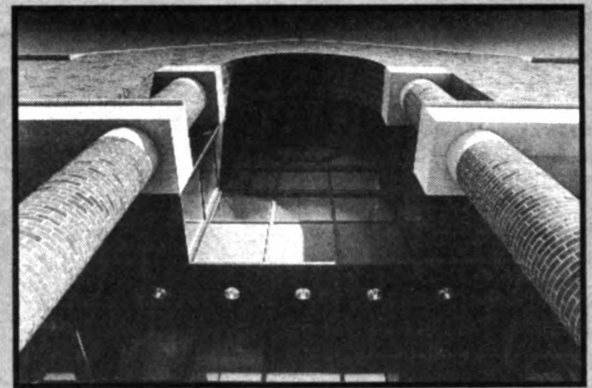

Across campus, the University Hospital and Clinics offers two approaches to smoking cessation. The Stop for Life program features a three-week course and a "cold turkey" option that meets six times. The three-week tapering session meets once a week from noon to 1 p.m. in 315 Dockery Hall. The next session begins Sept. 13. On Oct. 3 the "cold turkey" quitters will join the group.

There is no fee for the courses. Hospital employees are given priority, but classes don't usually fill up and campus employees are welcome. To enroll call 882-4161.

"Group support really helps, so we like large groups," says course coordinator Linda Price. Perseverance is the key to quitting, she says. "It doesn't matter if people are nagging you — you have to make up your mind that you're going to stop smoking. Until you reach that point, it won't work." Price says some people sign up for the program several times. "That's OK. It may take more than one attempt to quit," she says.

Finding the right approach is the key to dropping the habit for some smokers. For those looking for ways to battle the stresses associated with quitting, the Psychological Clinic on campus might be able to help. The clinic provides one-on-one counseling, and fees vary. For information call 882-4677.

Smokers who want to quit on their own can call the American Lung Association. It offers "Freedom from Smoking for You and Your Family," a $7 self-help guide that lists step-by-step ways to overcome cessation roadblocks. The association also has an employer-assisted smoking elimination program, information for non-smokers who want to help someone stop smoking and pamphlets telling non-smokers how to stick up for their rights. For information call the American Lung Association at 874-2616.

If a co-worker is trying to quit smoking, the lung association offers these tips for smokers and non-smokers:

- Ask what you can do to help. Agree on a plan of support.
- If you are a smoker, try not to smoke around people who have strong urges to smoke.
- Be patient with the quitting smoker's irritability.
- Know when to give the quitter breathing room. Recognize your tension level.
- If you are angry at the smokers for some reason, do not express your anger by sabotaging their effort to stop smoking.
- Above all, maintain open lines of communication — especially if there is a feeling of tension.

Walter Smith, the new Black Culture Center coordinator, wants to involve faculty and staff in the center's academic and cultural programs.

A center of attention

Painters are brightening the walls of the Black Culture Center, but the new coordinator says changes to the center won't just be cosmetic.

"The objective of the center is to move students toward a degree," says Walter Smith, who began July 15 as the coordinator of the student center, which is tucked between residence halls and parking lots at 823 Virginia Ave. "It's not a social center, although social and cultural events are part of our activities. We'll offer something for all students. My goal is to broaden students' perspectives as they move toward their degree."

On the cultural end, a black heritage lecture series begins this month and a regular international culinary bazaar will feature food from all regions of the world. Academic programming includes a survival skills series and, as soon as a computer arrives, weekly computer labs.

Involving faculty, staff and the community will enhance the center's activities, Smith says. "I'm challenging black and white faculty and staff to be student oriented," he says. "And I hope that they will take the initiative to speak with me to find out what the center offers. Any input they have toward our goal is encouraged and accepted. They have to love what we're going to do."

Creating programming for students is Smith's first love. A graduate student in library and informational sciences, Smith, 41, spent last year as a researcher in the Office of Academic Assistance. He says he interviewed for this job because it allows him to be creative and innovative. He replaces Willie Robinson, who left in December to become assistant dean for student development and academic affairs at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Before he came to Mizzou, Smith coordinated handicapped student services and directed learning skills programs at UM-Kansas City from 1973 to 1980. He's also been an educational consultant and has taught special education classes.

In his new job, he spent the first month cleaning the center and rounding up student workers to run activities. Among student projects is the revitalization of "Primetime," the center's newsletter.

No matter the project, Smith says he will demand the best from student workers. He's thinking of setting a grade-point requirement. "You're a role model for the students who come here," he told one student worker during a recent meeting. Smith says setting high standards for the students will prepare them for the business world. "I want it to be a good professional work experience for them. They are the foundation of what we do here."

HOSPITAL OPENS CENTER AT MALL

Blood pressure screening and literature on planning nutritious diets are just a couple of the free services offered at University Hospital and Clinic's new Health Information Center at Columbia Mall.

Located inside the S. Worley Street entrance of the mall, the center will have its grand opening Sept. 10. Hours will be 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays and noon to 6 p.m. Sundays.

Coordinator Mary Edwards says the center will offer literature and videotapes on health topics and free health-related personal consultations. Visitors also may have their blood pressure and pulse checked, and their weight measured. The information can be entered on computer and stored until the next visit for comparisons.

BENEFITS BOOK PUBLISHED

A new employee benefits book has been published and will be distributed to all faculty and staff this month.

The 72-page book is easy to read and summarizes major employee benefits. It answers hundreds of questions relating to medical coverage, life insurance, tax-deferred annuities and other benefits.

The new book does not include enrollment forms. New employees can pick up those forms at the Employee Benefits Office, 114 Heinkel Building.

HAM FANS, TAKE NOTE

Chancellor Haskell Monroe will auction four champion hams as part of Mizzou's third annual Salute to AgriMissouri Day Sept. 10.

"We cured nearly 40 hams during the spring semester, and they've been hanging since that time to acquire that delicious flavor that only a cured ham can have," says Tony Francis, chairman of the ham show and sale.

Hams will be judged at the Hearnes Center at 9 a.m., and the four champions will be auctioned by Monroe at 12:15 p.m. The remaining hams will be available for sale.

Proceeds will fund educational activities of Mizzou's Block and Bridle Club.

Benefit changes OK'd

While the final word on a medical premium increase isn't expected until after the Board of Curators' September meeting, some changes were approved this summer in other benefit plans. In June, the board approved the following revisions.

- Effective July 1, employees no longer are required to enroll in both the medical and dental plans. New employees may choose to enroll in one or both plans.

- Also effective July 1, any employee or dependent who does not enroll in the dental plan during the employee's first 60 days on the job no longer will have to provide evidence of good health to enroll in the plan at a later date. Likewise, family status changes (marriage, birth of child) will not require proof of good health. However, during the first year of coverage, late enrollees will be eligible only for Type A expenses. Those expenses primarily deal with preventive dental health care such as routine cleaning, examinations and X-rays. Such services are limited to two a calendar year.

Following the first year of coverage, individuals can claim full benefits of the dental plan.

- Changes to the retirement, disability and death benefit plan took effect Sept. 1. Revisions include a 2.3 percent increase in the retirement benefit for people receiving benefits as of Sept. 1 and whose benefits began on or before Sept. 1, 1986. This increase applies only to University retirees receiving retirement benefits; employees receiving disability benefits from the plan; or spouses receiving derivative retirement or disability benefits.

Also within that plan, the benefit beneficiary designation now will allow employees to designate any person, trust or estate as beneficiary of the plan's lump sum death benefit. Previously, this designation was limited to specified family members.

In addition, the provision allowing creditable service for sabbatical, research or development leaves was amended to require that employees on leave return to the University no later than the beginning of the next academic year for the leave time to be included in creditable service calculations.

Regarding early retirement benefits, the plan will continue to provide those benefits for employees age 55 to 60 who have 10 years of service and for employees older than 60 with five years of service. However, the plan was amended to require that an individual applying for such benefits must become eligible for them while earning creditable service. For example, a faculty member with 10 years of service who turns 55 while on a sabbatical leave must return to the University for at least one year following the leave to apply for early retirement benefits.

- On July 1, the filing process for a duplicate coverage inquiry changed. Currently on a claim where another group insurance carrier's benefits pay first, a DCI is sent to the other carrier by the University's medical benefit administrator, Provident Life and Accident Insurance Co. When the DCI is returned, the balance of the charges are considered for payment by Provident. As of July 1, when a claim is received and Provident determines that the University is the secondary carrier, an explanation of benefits will be issued presuming the other carrier will pay 100 percent of the charges.

There will be a message on the EOB explaining this and asking the insured to send a copy of the EOB from the other carrier if this is not the case. The claim will be reopened and recalculated only when the information is received. Employees submitting claims in which the University is secondary should enclose a copy of the primary carrier's EOB.

Employee benefits staff think the change will reduce delays in receiving information from other carriers.

With questions about any of the changes, campus employees may call the Employee Benefits Office at 882-2146. Hospital employees should call 882-1536.

FOR THE RECORD

FOR SALE: The MU Alumni Association is selling a used KROY 80 lettering machine with one printwheel (Helvetica 24 point). $100. Call Sue Arnold at 882-6611.

That dreaded weight

If you're unhappy with your weight but can't seem to find the time to exercise, don't feel alone. You're in the majority on campus.

That was the leading result from a survey taken last spring by the campus wellness committee. Randy Smith, assistant professor of physical therapy and co-chairman of the committee, says 600 surveys were distributed randomly to faculty, staff and students. "While these results are not comprehensive, we feel they are representative," he says.

Smith says 58.4 percent of the respondents indicated they were not happy with their current weight, and 42.9 percent considered themselves 10 or more pounds overweight. But those people also said a lack of time was the main reason they did not participate in exercise or other wellness programs.

"More than half of the respondents said they would be interested in time management programs," Smith says. "There also was a lot of interest in the areas of relaxation and stress reduction."

Smith says the committee plans to offer lunchtime and evening wellness programs and will begin the semester with a fitness program at Jesse Hall. Walking during the noon hour is the main feature of the plan, which will include speakers every two weeks.

"Other departments offer wellness programs, too," he adds. "Health and Physical Education has a Fitness for Living program, and topics like stress reduction and time management are often covered in seminars offered by Psychology or Counseling Services.

Wanted: architect for alumni center

A six-member committee planning Mizzou's new alumni center is looking for an architect for the 55,000-square-foot structure.

Members of the planning committee are Eleanor Frasier, former MU Alumni Association president; Tom Lawson, former superintendent of the Hazelwood School District in St. Louis County; C. Robert Barton, president of Traders Insurance Co. of Kansas City; John Epple Jr., vice president and trust officer of Boone County National Bank; Norman Moore, vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services; and Roger Gafke, vice chancellor for Development, University and Alumni Relations.

"The development of a new alumni center in the heart of campus will benefit the entire University community," Frasier says. "It will include meeting rooms, banquet facilities, a visitors' center, University Club, offices associated with development, university and alumni relations, and other features."

The building will be called the Donald W. Reynolds Alumni Center. In February, Reynolds, BJ '27, founder of the Donrey Media Group, donated $9 million toward the center — the largest gift in Mizzou's history.

The committee hopes to recommend an architect by the end of the year, and construction is expected to begin in 1989. The center will be located southwest of Jesse Hall.

Search is on for new vice provost

Provost Lois DeFleur has named a seven-member search committee for a new vice provost for budget and operations. Gerald Brouder held that position until Feb. 1 when he became deputy to the chancellor.

DeFleur says the search will be internal. "We have qualified people here on campus, and it would be helpful to recruit someone who is knowledgeable about our processes," she says. The provost wants to fill the post by the end of this semester.

Duties of the vice provost for budget and operations include preparing budget narratives and program improvement requests, assisting in formulation, implementation and evaluation of academic budgets, and representing the provost in matters pertaining to construction, renovation and space allocations.

Members of the committee are Chairman John Stowe, professor of finance; Peter Davis, professor of law; Sandra Gault, associate professor of special education; Larry Kantner, professor of art; Kenneth Neimeyer, associate dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine; Thomas Shaughnessy, director of libraries; and Rosemary Porter, assistant professor of nursing.

How to take it easy:

Welcome back to Mizzou. We're Campus Dining Services, and we operate almost all the campus eating places. Whether you're eating in our full service restaurant, homestyle cafe, 2 fast food restaurants, 7 dining halls or 9 snack bars you never need cash if you have an Easy Eating account.

Is it that easy?

Sure, Easy Eating is a quick and convenient debit plan. All you do is make an initial deposit with any CDS cashier and you can use your Mizzou ID like cash at any of our locations. Once your credit is used up just redeposit with any CDS cashier, or by mail, and continue to take it easy. If all this sounds simple you've got the right idea- this program lets you eat as much or as little as you want, whenever you want, wherever you want. Treat a friend with your credit, treat a bunch of friends but most importantly treat yourself to an Easy Eating account today.

How can I sign up?

To open an Easy Eating account simply fill out a deposit envelope available through any CDS cashier. Once filled out return it with your amount to be deposited, (or payroll deduction card) to any cashier. Two working days later your Easy Eating account is ready to use. Any questions, ask your cashier for our Easy Eating brochure, and start taking it easy.

Joe Genovese is a student in the School of Nursing's accelerated nurses program. The program is one of the first of its kind in the Midwest.

Nursing new goals

Joe Genovese is a man determined to make it in what traditionally is considered a woman's world.

The 38-year-old registered nurse is enrolled in the School of Nursing's accelerated nurses program, designed to help registered nurses without a bachelor's degree stay on the managerial career path.

Genovese, who has an associate degree in nursing, is one of many mid-career registered nurses who finds the path to upper management blocked by the lack of a bachelor's or master's degree. "I can't advance unless I have the degree behind me," he says. "With this program there are lots of possibilities." The accelerated program leads to bachelor's and master's degrees simultaneously.

The program allows students to apply 12 hours from the master's program toward their undergraduate degree. Students also can gain up to 34 nursing hours through advanced standing tests and 15 hours of other prerequisites. They may test out of up to six hours of non-nursing courses.

Each student's transcript is evaluated to determine the number of credit hours that can be applied toward the degrees. It will take Genovese about two years to complete the program.

Without a plan like this, Genovese says he probably would have no chance to get a master's degree. When his studies began this fall, he began juggling a full-time job at the Truman Veterans Hospital with the care of his three children. "With all my other responsibilities, I just wouldn't have had five years to invest in a master's program," Genovese says.

He typifies the sort of student the program plans to attract. "It's no easy thing to balance a family, a career and school," says Rose Porter, assistant professor of nursing and program director. "These students have special needs and I work closely with them to help them find ways to manage it all."

The program, which began this fall, is one of the first of its kind in the Midwest. Porter predicts it will be popular. With little publicity and no official announcements, she already has been contacted by 41 registered nurses. "The program will challenge students because it builds on, rather than repeats, what they know."

Genovese is a little apprehensive about returning to school. "It's been three years since I attended school," he says, "so I've got to get back into the groove. But I'm excited about what the program holds for me, and I always finish what I start."

NEW EMPLOYEES GET IN FREE

If you're a new Mizzou employee, you'll have no excuse for not attending a Tiger football game this fall — especially since a free ticket is waiting for you.

In August, new faculty and staff were sent letters redeemable for a free ticket to the Sept. 17 Mizzou vs. Houston game. New employees who did not receive a letter may pick up one before Sept. 17 at the athletic ticket office on the west side of the Hearnes Center.

Letters may be redeemed weekdays before Sept. 17 at the ticket office or at the eastside stadium ticket booth the day of the game.

"It's just a way of welcoming new employees to the campus and letting them know how important they are to us," says Joe Castiglione, director of communications and marketing for Intercollegiate Athletics. "This is the second time we've done this; it worked well last year."

OB/GYN CLINIC EXPANDS SERVICE

The University Obstetrics/Gynecology Clinic has moved from the University Hospital location to a new site at 3211 S. Providence, just north of the University Physicians' Green Meadows facility. Physicians began scheduling appointments there Sept. 1.

The move will allow the clinic to expand in both space and service. In addition, the new location is more convenient and private. Patients will see the same physician each time they visit the clinic. For information or to schedule an appointment, call 882-7184.

MIZZOU PATENTS BRAIN SCANNER

A brain-scanning device developed by a Mizzou physician has given the UM system the largest patent in its history.

The machine, known as a multiplane imager, is four times faster and much cheaper than equipment now in use. It is dedicated exclusively to brain imaging for medical diagnosis.

Called MUMPI — Missouri University Multi-Plane Imager — the machine was developed by K. William Logan, associate professor of radiology and medical physicist at Truman Veterans Hospital. MUMPI can make four images of the brain at the same time, and it takes less than a minute to complete the imaging.

The cost of the imager is expected to be approximately $300,000. Similar equipment now costs up to $1 million. Robert Killoren, UM director of patents and licensing, says MUMPI's patent has 93 claims regarding its technology. "This is an extraordinarily high number of legal claims to the technology involved," he says.

Council meets in short session

Faculty Council met in an abbreviated session Sept. 1 to discuss one issue — the dissolved College of Public and Community Services.

"We need to make sure that the reassignment of programs from that college to other colleges does not affect our membership," said council Chairman Gordon Kimber, professor of agronomy. "If it is determined that we lose one or two people, we should insist that replacements be elected at large." He suggested the council discuss the matter at its next meeting.

Kimber also said he will contact the Institutional Research and Planning Center to determine the number of divisions now on campus. "All of this will affect the way elections are held in the spring," he added.

The open meeting lasted less than 10 minutes. The council went into executive session to discuss personnel and budget matters and to hear a report from UM President C. Peter Magrath on those topics.

The group's next meeting is scheduled Sept. 15. Kimber said the council will hold a retreat Sept. 8 at the Holiday Inn Executive Center "to discuss a number of issues and get acquainted."

Syracuse professor gets minority post

K.C. Morrison, professor of political science and Afro-American studies at Syracuse University, will start June 1 as the University's first vice provost for minority affairs and faculty development. The post was created in May 1987, following requests by black students, faculty and staff to improve the campus environment for minorities.

Morrison, who also will teach political science, is on research leave until May 1989. He is conducting research on black immigrants in Europe, while holding a research appointment with the Council of Europe in Strasbourg, France. At Mizzou, he will work with the faculty development committee, and plan and implement faculty development programs. In addition, he will implement efforts to improve the status of minorities on campus and to ensure that campus programs meant to benefit minorities are effective and complement rather than duplicate one another.

"Dr. Morrison is a wonderful combination of an outstanding scholar, researcher and administrator," Provost Lois DeFleur says. "He has demonstrated his leadership skills as chairman of the Afro-American studies department at Syracuse."

Morrison is the author of three books, Black Political Mobilization, Leadership and Power; Housing the Urban Poor in Africa; and Ethnicity and Political Integration; as well as numerous scholarly articles. He received a bachelor's degree from Tougaloo (Miss.) College in 1968, and a master's and a doctorate from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in 1969 and 1977, respectively. He has taught Afro-American politics and culture, American government and institutions, African politics and culture, and political philosophy. His wife, Johnetta Wade Morrison, will join the faculty in the College of Home Economics.

Tracking time

Packed with campus lore and legends, Alumni Association calendar highlights Sesquicentennial.

School spirit took on a new meaning at Mizzou in April 1890. The Columbia Missouri Herald reported "ghostly apparitions" dancing in the windows of the Chancellor's Residence. The unoccupied house was placed under guard.

The ghost story is just part of the campus lore and legends included in the MU Alumni Association's 1988-89 Sesquicentennial calendar. Covering 16 months beginning with September 1988, the calendar lists Alumni Association events and major Sesquicentennial activities.

Faculty and staff may buy a calendar for $5 by calling Darlene Miles, senior secretary in Alumni Activities, or Mike Kateman, assistant director of Alumni Relations, at 882-6611. Quantities are limited. For dues-paying Alumni Association members, the calendar is free as an annual membership benefit.

The calendar's cover print, showing the Quadrangle as it appeared in 1910, is available from the Alumni Association for $245 plus $7.50 shipping and handling. Measuring 37 3/4 inches wide by 24 3/4 inches tall, the print is double matted and framed in solid hardwood. Make checks payable to the University of Missouri-Columbia Alumni Association and send to the University of Missouri-Columbia Alumni Association, P.O. Box 511, Wayne, Pa. 19087. To order with a credit card, call toll free 1-800-523-0124 and ask to speak to operator 2251L.
