Board will discuss funding requests

Coordinating board panel recommends 10 percent hike in Mizzou faculty salaries.

University officials are guardedly optimistic following a recommendation of a 10 percent salary increase for faculty members next academic year. That recommendation was made Oct. 21 by the fiscal affairs committee of the Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education. The full board will meet at 10 a.m. Nov. 11 in N214-215 Memorial Union to consider the committee's action, which also would provide a 5 percent raise for staff.

"I asked for a double-digit salary recommendation and we got one," UM System President C. Peter Magrath says. "The budget process is long, and I feel good about this first step. We're getting where we want to be."

Adds Gordon Kimber, chairman of Faculty Council: "I'm very pleased that the committee would make this recommendation for faculty salaries. But I am disappointed that the board is not treating staff equally on this matter. The staff is equally deserving." (See related story on Page 2.)

The Coordinating Board for Higher Education is an advisory group to the General Assembly and has no formal legislative power. Among its duties, it makes recommendations on state appropriations for higher education. "Last year the coordinating board recommended a 13 percent overall budget increase for us, and it appears we'll be close to those numbers again this year," says James T. McGill, vice president for UM System Administrative Affairs.

The fiscal affairs committee also recommended a 3 percent increase in UM System expense and equipment funds and a 10 percent increase in library acquisitions for 1989-90. The panel voted to recommend no funding for program improvements for the next fiscal year.

"There will be some fine-tuning of the figures between now and the time the full board meets," McGill says. "We'll have to wait and see how it shakes out. All in all, though, we're pleased."

At that Nov. 11 meeting, the board will consider the UM System's request for $315 million in state funds for general operations in fiscal 1990, including $51 million in new monies. The board also will consider a total capital improvements request of $254 million.

The general operations request includes a number of program improvements at Mizzou, including $1.3 million to enhance undergraduate education; $800,000 for minority education; $500,000 for engineering; $1 million for molecular biology; $300,000 for teacher education; $500,000 for economic development research; $250,000 for journalism enhancement; $850,000 for veterinary medicine; and $300,000 for medical research. A total of $2.2 million in additional funds has been requested for the University System's libraries.

Capital improvement requests include $10.5 million for a new laboratory and classroom building at the College of Engineering; $12 million for another addition at Ellis Library; $13.7 million for a new veterinary medicine teaching hospital; $5.7 million for an addition at the School of Forestry, Fisheries and Wildlife; and $270,000 to plan an addition to the School of Medicine.

Magrath told the committee that full funding of the appropriations request is needed because limited state support during the past decade has caused the University System to lose substantial ground in meeting its goals, particularly regarding faculty and staff compensation.

"Four professors who were recruited from a single department (at Mizzou) between 1984 and 1987 have generated more than $4 million in grant money since leaving Missouri," Magrath told the panel. "The loss of leading faculty members at this state's premier research university must end."

Researcher Nancy Fair uses an Instron tensile tester to measure how far the cornstarch plastic can be stretched and the force required to break it.

A pollution solution

Cornstarch plastics research could help to put the nation's mounting garbage problems in the bag.

Mizzou's New Products Group is testing a trash bag that may ease the strain on rapidly filling landfills, solve some environmental problems and, in the process, create a new market for America's corn growers.

This biodegradable trash bag of the future is made partially of cornstarch. Unlike today's plastic, which is made solely with a petroleum base, it takes months to a few years to decompose, compared with hundreds of years for conventional plastics.

The New Products Group is testing that degradation process. Led by Gene Iannotti, associate professor of agricultural engineering, the group consists of scientists from areas such as agricultural engineering, chemistry, and textile and apparel management. Thus far, its work has attracted $60,000 in research funds from the Missouri Corn Growers Association.

The association acknowledged the group's research at an Oct. 11 ceremony in Jefferson City. The event kicked off a 60-day test run of the bags in the capital city, the first town in the United States to do a citywide test of the product. The ceremony also recognized growing support for the technology. Advocates include legislators from the farm belt states who in early October created a "corn caucus" in Washington to promote the use of corn in biodegradable products.

Using corn in non-food products opens up new markets for farmers, enabling them to sell more corn. The Corn Growers Association estimates that 300 million to 500 million bushels of corn would be used annually in cornstarch plastics. Currently, America produces up to eight billion bushels of corn each year.

While the cornstarch bags aren't on store shelves now, researchers expect they'll be available in a few years. Currently, the bags cost more to produce than standard plastic bags. But researchers expect those costs to go down.

To make the bags, manufacturers blend cornstarch with traditional synthetic substances used in making plastics. The cornstarch in the mix is the key to the bag's quick breakdown. Bacteria are attracted to the cornstarch as a food source. These microscopic creatures devour the cornstarch, ruining the bags' physical structure.

In addition to checking the degradation of the product in mock landfill conditions and at a Columbia sewage plant, the Mizzou researchers are seeing how fast the bags decompose when exposed to air and light. They'll also check the effect the cornstarch plastic has on groundwater, study its chemical structure, and test its elasticity and strength.

The research will help manufacturers to develop the perfect blend of cornstarch and polyethylene (a petroleum product used in making plastic). "We're troubleshooting to make sure the bags will be as good as they can be," Iannotti says. "We don't want them falling apart on the grocery store shelves."

In addition to the garbage bags, the New Products Group is researching other non-food products in which corn could be used. A non-salt road de-icer is one promising idea. And cornstarch could be used in other plastic goods, such as grocery bags and milk containers.

If adopted, the technology, along with options such as recycling and burning, will reduce the stress on landfill space and the strain on the environment. Currently, more than 90 percent of the 200 million tons of garbage that Americans create each year is buried in landfills. A 1988 Department of Natural Resources study reports that more than half of Missouri's landfills will be full by 1998. And new places to put garbage are becoming harder to find.

"It's not a cure-all for our waste-management problems, but it is a step in the right direction," says Nancy Fair, assistant professor of textile and apparel management and a member of the New Products Group. "It makes people think of the options we have."

AND NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET

So you won't see Mark Twain next spring. How about Harry Truman?

The University Concert Series will present Kevin McCarthy in "Give 'em Hell, Harry!" on May 5. The performance replaces "Mark Twain Tonight" with Hal Holbrook, who will not be touring the Midwest.

"Give 'em Hell, Harry!" is a one-man play that had its world premiere in 1975 at Ford's Theater in Washington. It offers a look inside the "kitchen cabinet" of the former president.

Those with tickets for the Holbrook show may use them for the McCarthy performance.

HAVE A QUESTION FOR A LEGISLATOR?

If you've got a question about the state's legislative process, you won't want to miss a 12:30 p.m. Nov. 2 event in Jesse Auditorium.

State Sen. Roger Wilson, Rep. Chris Kelly and Rep. Ken Jacob, all Democrats from Columbia, will be on hand to discuss the legislative, budgetary and appropriations process. They also will answer questions. The forum is sponsored by Staff Advisory Council.

"The event is a chance for faculty and staff to better understand what our legislators are doing for the University," Staff Council Chairman Larry Windmoeller says.

TEACHER'S BOOK BENEFITS JAPANESE

Japanese nurses now have a source for advising families on self-care during pregnancy.

A 1984 textbook, Nursing Care Plans for the Childbearing Family, written by Virginia Aukamp, assistant professor of nursing at Mizzou, has been translated into Japanese.

"Japan is trying to improve its nursing educational system," says Marion K. Welch, executive editor at Appleton-Century-Crofts of Norwalk, Conn., the book's publisher. "This book reflects the professional relationship of nursing and the self-care theory to the childbearing family."

High-risk pregnancies, complications during labor and delivery, needs of the newborn and needs of pregnant mothers of different age groups are some of the topics covered in the book.

Staff Council backs effort to increase employees' pay

Staff Advisory Council at its Oct. 27 meeting approved a statement saying it supports Faculty Council's efforts to retain good faculty and staff by improving salaries. Retention of quality employees will ensure that students continue to receive a first-rate education at Mizzou, the statement reads.

The declaration also called for continued meetings among administrators, faculty and staff regarding budget decisions. The council's executive committee will try to meet with Chancellor Haskell Monroe to relate staff concerns and to discuss ways to communicate the importance of staff in the University's missions. The support statement also will be sent to Faculty Council.

This marks the first time the council has gone on record in support of the faculty's efforts. Council Chairman Larry Windmoeller, assistant manager of Pharmacy Services at University Hospital, did ask for consideration of low staff salaries at a Sept. 27 faculty and staff meeting with UM System President C. Peter Magrath. As an advisory group, Staff Council does not have the same power as Faculty Council. But many council members said they have heard from staff who want the council to voice their concerns about low salaries.

"Ever since I've been on council we've pushed for salaries and worried about poor morale caused by low salaries," said Kathleen Edwards, library assistant II in the Journalism School. "This is no new position on our part." Windmoeller read letters he had received from staff groups in the College of Education and the College of Human Environmental Sciences. The letters asked the council to support the faculty's efforts to upgrade salaries.

In addition, council members will attend the Nov. 11 Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education meeting in Columbia. That open session is scheduled at 10 a.m. in N214-215 Memorial Union. Last week, the board's fiscal affairs committee recommended 10 percent salary hikes for faculty compared with a 5 percent boost for staff. (See story on Page 1.) "The Staff Advisory Council is completely aware of the statement and will attend the Nov. 11 meeting to evaluate and to understand the situation and then will proceed from there," Windmoeller said.

The council will give staff and faculty a chance to take their concerns to the top at a 12:30 p.m. Nov. 2 session in Jesse Auditorium with state Sen. Roger Wilson, D-Columbia; Rep. Chris Kelly, D-Columbia; and Rep. Ken Jacob, D-Columbia. The council originally scheduled the informational meeting for Oct. 12 but had to cancel it because vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen was in town. Staff and faculty will be able to ask the legislators questions regarding the appropriations process.

In other business, elections committee Chairman Harold Lynch, senior production technician in the School of Medicine's Educational Resources Group, announced that a slate of candidates for the council's upcoming election has been prepared. After the chancellor approves the slate, the candidates will be featured in Mizzou Weekly, and staff members will receive ballots.

Staff Recognition Week Chairwoman Jo Pflieger, administrative assistant in veterinary microbiology, reported her group continues to work on plans for the April event. She urged staff who have ideas or who would like to volunteer to help with the event to call her at 882-7347.

Administration pledges help on assessment

University administrators will be happy to work with faculty groups to shape assessment programs, Vice Provost Jeff Chinn told Faculty Council Oct. 27.

"There are some good suggestions here. The administration can live with it," Chinn said of a 51-page report by the faculty task force on assessment. The council unanimously approved the report, which includes 17 recommendations.

Task force Chairman Kerby Miller, associate professor of history, told the council the recommendations "can be employed to democratize the assessment process in the future."

Among the recommendations are that assessment policies be undertaken primarily by Faculty Council-appointed committees; that general education testing be implemented on a selective and voluntary basis; that test scores be utilized for program improvements, not for institutional comparisons or campus funding requests; and that students' test results or scores not be made public.

Chinn said while he agreed with the sentiments of the last point, he could not promise the result. "We are required to report to the Board of Curators," he told the council. "Anything we report to the curators is a matter of public record under the Freedom of Information Act. We cannot stop aggregate test results from being made public, if that is the wish."

Chinn also said the $200,000 cost of assessment last year came from a special UM System fund for that purpose. Assessment this year is being funded in a similar manner, he added.

The means by which assessment is funded brought the only serious debate. The council deleted a portion of the first recommendation that said "programs should be suspended unless the costs are derived from new appropriations specifically targeted for assessment." Members said that passage was too vague.

"Does this mean the funds will be earmarked up front by the legislature or by University Hall as they come to this campus?" asked council member Peter Markie, associate professor of philosophy. Member Joel Hartman, associate professor of rural sociology, told the council it should not support the earmarking of state funds. "That would open up a whole Pandora's box," he said. "If the legislature could earmark funds for assessment, they could earmark everything."

Chinn told the council he welcomes suggestions on assessment. "We'll be happy to work with any committees on the subject," he added.

Professor Emeritus Robert Daniel leads the retirees region in Mizzou's United Way campaign.

Doing their fair share

The more time you spend witnessing the benefits the United Way provides to communities, the more likely you are to contribute to a local campaign.

That's the philosophy of Robert Daniel, professor emeritus of psychology and district chairman of the retirees region for Mizzou's United Way campaign. The region is made up of Mizzou and UM System retirees in Boone County.

The group consistently reaches its goal faster than any other region on campus. This year, they've already pledged 84 percent of their $19,000 goal; the group is closer to its pledge goal than the other five University regions.

"By the time anybody qualifies for retirement, they've been in the community for quite a while. Their roots are in the community," Daniel says. "They have come to know and appreciate what the community is doing — perhaps more than those who are still working."

With less than a week remaining in the drive, the University has pledged 64 percent of its $190,000 goal, according to the Oct. 26 tally. Robert Bailey, assistant dean and academic adviser in the School of Law and chairman of the 1988 campus campaign, says $122,065 has been raised.

"We're right on schedule," Bailey says. "I'm looking forward to the remainder of the campaign, and I know volunteers and campaign workers will work hard to help bring us to our goal." The campus campaign ends Nov. 4.

Daniel, who taught introductory psychology laboratory courses at the University from 1942 to 1984, is able to see first-hand how far United Way contributions go. He is secretary of the Boone County Council on Aging, one of 27 local agencies partially funded by the United Way.

The council helps the elderly manage personal affairs, counsels widows or widowers, and organizes elderly participation in local volunteer groups.

Daniel says he cannot take credit for the warm cooperation the retirees give the United Way. A letter explaining the campaign and asking retirees to contribute is sent out early in the fall. The letter includes a card the retiree can fill out and return. "All I do is sign the letter," Daniel says. "They do the rest."

They're here!

Clean your room! Mom and Dad are coming to town for Parents Weekend Nov. 4 through 6. The event, part of the Sesquicentennial Celebration, will give parents of Mizzou students a taste of campus life.

On tap are tours, a film, concerts, buffets, Mizzou football, and an arts-and-crafts show featuring 125 exhibitors. For details, see the Calendar on Page 8.

Parents may stop by a tent on the Arts and Science Mall from 10 a.m. until game time Nov. 5 to register, pick up a "Mizzou Parent" button and sign up for parents contests. There will be prizes for parents who traveled the greatest and the least distance, and for parents with the most children attending or who have attended Mizzou. The Greek organization and the residence hall with the most number of parents registered will win pizza parties. The tent will be located between Brady Commons and the General Classroom Building.

In another contest, students wrote essays on why their parent deserved to be Parent of the Year. The winning student and honored parent will be announced during the football game. Prizes are a University Bookstore scholarship for winter semester books for the student and a special Mizzou package for the parent.

Local hotels anticipate full houses as parents of many of Mizzou's 23,434 students come to town. In contrast, the first graduating class had only two members. But it was a true family affair: they were cousins.

Yarbo will head national task force

John W. Yarbo, professor of medical oncology, has been named chairman of a national task force developing clinical guidelines for care of cancer patients.

Yarbo will serve as chairman of the oncology care clinical indicator task force for the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations.

"We chose Dr. Yarbo because of his broad experience in multidisciplinary cancer issues, because he has done a significant amount of national committee work, and because he is interested not just in research but also in quality-of-care issues," says Robert J. Marder, project manager of clinical indicators for the joint commission.

Yarbo says his task force will look at "the measurement of results of treatment rather than the process of treatment." Clinical indicators, he says, are "common-sense things" that can show the quality of a facility's medical care. "If what we do doesn't make sense to people, it'll be difficult to enforce," he adds.

Yarbo founded and is editor of Seminars in Oncology. He served as associate director of the National Cancer Institute, where he directed the National Cancer Centers Program. He directed the Missouri Cancer Program from 1975 through 1979.

Journalism Week draws media giants

Next week the School of Journalism turns its classrooms over to some of the premier names in the media.

For more than 50 years, the school's annual Journalism Week has brought the nation's leading journalists, advertisers and broadcasters to campus. This year's event, from Nov. 9 through 12, is no exception.

"This is one of the richest and most varied programs we have ever presented," Dean

James D. Atwater says. "We want to extend an invitation to students, faculty members and the public to meet next week and hear some of the outstanding people in the business."

Since 1930, the week's major highlight has been the presentation of the Missouri Honor Medals for lifetime accomplishments in journalism.

Charlayne Hunter-Gault is among six people who will receive a 1988 honor award at the Nov. 11 medalist banquet. A national correspondent for the MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour, she also is the banquet's featured speaker. The banquet will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Windsor Ballroom at the Holiday Inn Executive Center, Interstate 70 and Stadium Boulevard, with a reception beforehand. Tickets are $15 for students and $20 for the public.

Other winners of the international award are the acclaimed CBS show "On the Road" with Charles Kuralt, who will be on hand to accept the medal; Marshall Loeb, BJ '50, managing editor of Fortune magazine; Dorothy Jurney, former Knight-Ridder newspaper editor; Earl G. Graves, publisher of Black Enterprise magazine; and Jerry Della Femina, advertising executive and author.

There is no cost for other Journalism Week sessions, but you may want to arrive early for good seating. Discussion and session leaders include former Interim Dean Elmer Lower, BJ '33, the only person to head the news departments at ABC, CBS and NBC; Hannibal native Ron Powers, a CBS news correspondent and Pulitzer Prize winner; Richard Mackson, a Sports Illustrated photographer who covered the Olympics and World Series; and Robin Brown, Life magazine layout and art designer.

5520 computer system will be phased out on campus

IBM has discontinued the 5520 computer line. But don't panic. No one will be coming to offices to pull 5520 terminals from desk tops. Departments have plenty of time to investigate replacement systems.

"Actually, the longer you can wait, the better," says Bill Plummer, director of Campus Computing. "Computers get better and cheaper every day."

IBM stopped making the 5520 system about a year ago, but the maintenance contracts will continue for at least two years. "We're looking at continuing maintenance beyond that on a special bid basis," Plummer says. Such arrangements will cost more than standard maintenance. "The system will be used in the present way for the next couple of years. That gives us plenty of time for an ordinary, evolutionary transition," Plummer adds.

The approximately 16 administrative divisions hooked up to 5520 systems have several options to consider. Microcomputers linked together, called local area networks, may be the most cost effective and flexible replacement, Plummer says. Macintosh or IBM personal computers are two choices. A campuswide communication system similar to that established with the 5520 system can be developed for the microcomputers.

"The local area networks will be able to preserve all the functions that are presently being done on the 5520," Plummer says. In addition, there are mini-computers, similar to the 5520, that also can be purchased. IBM's system 36 and AS400 are two examples.

Replacement costs will depend on the size of the administrative department and the system selected, Plummer says. But the per station cost of local area networks should be less than the 5520 system. "For $2,500 we can place a Macintosh terminal on a desk, and with a few more things you'd be ready to go," Plummer says. "With the 5520, it cost $2,500 for the terminal alone. The processing unit cost thousands of dollars." Maintenance of local area networks also is less expensive, he says.

Campus Computing soon will display replacement prototypes for departments to examine. "We've got plenty of time to show alternatives, get user input and solve technical problems to ensure that we are meeting the users' needs," Plummer says. With questions, system administrators can call Julie Thorn, office systems specialist with computing facilities, at 882-6000.

Building a Better Mizzou

At Campus Facilities, the work of our people often takes place in the background. But their achievements in building a better Mizzou are outstanding.

One of our hard-working employees is George Lyons, the principle construction manager at the Power Plant. It's his job to make sure each project literally comes together -- bolt by bolt.

With George's dedicated attention to all the details, it's no wonder his work stands out! We're proud to have George as a member of the Can-Do Crew.

Q&A

Q. What qualifications are required for parking operations cadets? My car has a sticker displayed for lot WG5. Within the past month, I've received two parking tickets. The reason: no hang tag. The latest incident marks the fourth or fifth ticket received by staff members in this office alone.

A. Aren't these cadets trained to observe stickers as well as hang tags? We've all called parking operations upon receipt of these tickets — only to be given the excuse, "We have some new cadets." It seems to me that a month and a half into the semester, being "new" is no excuse. The exorbitant fees we pay to parking operations should ensure worry-free parking. It is infuriating to receive unjustified parking tickets; it is time-consuming to have to call or write to rectify the problem.

A. "We do have a lot of turnover with cadets, and some of them may not get the word about parking stickers," says Maj. Jack Watring of the University Police. Watring says the cadets are trained to look for hang tags and stickers. "If they don't, it's strictly our fault," he says. "If that happens again, people can call me personally, and I will get it straightened out." His number is 882-7201.

Q. Why is it that the University continues to contract with Eppe Construction Co. for new campus projects when Jeanne Eppe is president of the Board of Curators? Doesn't this represent a conflict of interest? Surely it violates some code of ethics law. Even if there is nothing illegal about the arrangement, there is something unethical about it. Why does the University allow it?

A. "To my knowledge, Jeanne Eppe has no financial interest in the company," says Dennis Cesari, director of UM System Facilities Management Services. Eppe's brother-in-law is owner of the construction company, Cesari says. "Anytime a contract with Eppe Construction comes before the board for a vote, she abstains," he adds. According to Cesari, in the last few years the company has been awarded the Ellis Library expansion contract and another involving work at the Ashland dam area. "They are awarded maybe one or two projects a year out of hundreds on campus," he says.
