Pay hikes on the way

Governor's release of state funds opens door for salary increases.

Mark Feb. 15 on your calendars. That's the day when most Mizzou employees will receive checks representing five months' worth of a pay raise. And payroll checks at the end of February will reflect slightly higher salaries.

The raises are made possible by Gov. John Ashcroft's Dec. 15 release of $7.6 million in higher education funds. MU's share of the allocation is $1.87 million. Chancellor Haskell Monroe had pledged earlier that the money would be applied toward raises, which actually are extensions of raises employees received Sept. 1.

There are exceptions. University Hospital and Clinics administrators are developing a salary increase plan for hospital employees. Any increase would have to come from the hospital's current budget. The hospital receives a separate appropriation from the state, and Ashcroft did not release funds for the institution Dec. 15.

Also, campus employees hired after Sept. 1 will not receive raises. Student employees are not eligible for the raise, except teaching and research assistants who had been hired previously and received a raise Sept. 1. But the majority of MU employees will benefit.

"We are following the Board of Curators' policy, which requires that salary distribution be based on merit," Monroe says. "With that in mind, we will provide a 1 1/2 percent raise to all employees who received a Sept. 1 increase of 3 percent or less. For those who received a raise greater than 3 percent, we are providing an increase at the rate of one-half of the individual's Sept. 1 percentage raise, with a ceiling of 10 percent on the combined total increment."

A person who received a 2 percent raise in September, for instance, will receive 1 1/2 percent. A person who received a 6 percent raise in September will receive 3 percent. A person who received an 8 percent raise, however, will receive 2 percent — not 4 — because of the 10 percent ceiling.

The raises are retroactive to September, and the Feb. 15 checks will cover the raise during the period from September to January inclusive, says Diane Oerly, director of the Office of Institutional Research and Planning. "Nearly all MU employees received a 2 percent raise in September," she adds. "Most will receive an additional 1 1/2 percent."

She uses these examples: A person earning $15,000 who received a 2 percent increase Sept. 1 was earning $15,300 after the raise. That person will receive an extra 1 1/2 percent on the $15,000 base to bring the salary to $15,525, and will receive a check Feb. 15 for $93.75, representing five months' worth of the raise amount. A person earning $35,000 who received a 6 percent raise Sept. 1 was earning $37,100 after the raise. That person will receive an extra 3 percent to bring the salary to $38,150, and will receive a check Feb. 15 for $437.50.

Oerly says union-eligible employees on campus are exempted from the formula because theirs is an across-the-board increase given to all union-eligible employees. They will receive 1.35 percent raises.

MU's birthday bash begins

University begins its Sesquicentennial year with parade, music and speeches on Quadrangle.

The Sesquicentennial Celebration opened on a sunny and brisk Jan. 13 with a festive flag-raising ceremony on Francis Quadrangle. "The Sesquicentennial provides us with an opportunity to appreciate our past, but its most important purpose will be to contemplate the future," said Chancellor Haskell Monroe.

The fanfare began with a parade from the Boone County Courthouse columns to Francis Quadrangle along Eighth Street, christened Historic Avenue of the Columns in honor of the Sesquicentennial. Marching Mizzou, Truman the Tiger and the Golden Girls led the way. Dignitaries rode in a wagon pulled by Hilda and Louise, the College of Veterinary Medicine's mule team. "The Spirit of Mizzou — Movin' On," a 48-foot traveling exhibit, followed. A ribbon-cutting for the van was held later in the day.

Special guests at the flag-raising included Anne Fuqua Goad, who gave the invocation.

Her great-grandfather, J.S. Dorsey, helped to save the Columns from destruction after Academic Hall burned in 1892. Also on hand was Mayor Rodney Smith.

"As we come together on this historic site to raise the Sesquicentennial flag, we are in fact raising more than a symbol of the durability and longevity of the University," said Edwin S. Turner, president of the Board of Curators and an MU alumnus.

"We are raising the public awareness of the critical importance of higher education; we are raising our expectations for the improvement and further progress of the University; and we are raising the hopes of our citizens who understand that the path to a better and more fulfilling life leads through the University."

UM System President C. Peter Magrath called the anniversary "a glowing tribute to human progress and a cause for celebration, reflection and renewal."

As part of the ceremony, student leaders laid a wreath at Thomas Jefferson's original tombstone on the east side of the Quadrangle. "This monument reminds us daily of his advocacy of state-supported education, his faith in the West and Missouri's place in history as the first state in the Louisiana Purchase," Monroe said. As the black-and-gold Sesquicentennial flag was raised atop Jesse Hall, hundreds of balloons were released. Refreshments were served inside Jesse Hall, where a 42-inch-tall decorated cake in the shape of Academic Hall was on display. The cake was designed on a 3/8-inch scale by Edith Hall, a professional cake decorator. Made of Styrofoam, "it will last indefinitely," she said.

There will be ample occasions to display the sugary masterpiece. In all, more than 300 activities are planned to commemorate the Sesquicentennial, says Don Haskell, director of University Events. Here is a sampling:

A Sesquicentennial exhibition, "Building the University: Architecture, Planning and Restoration," will be on display on the first floor of Jesse Hall throughout 1989. The display is directed by Osmund Overby, professor of art history and archaeology.

Another exhibit focuses on how Missouri families have met their needs for goods and services in the past 150 years. "Changing Connections: The History of Missouri Families and Their Response to Change," will be on display in the lobby concourse of University Hospital and Clinics through March 4, and also will travel statewide. The sponsor of the touring exhibit is Boone Hospital Center.

Missouri youths will have a visual history lesson in "The Missouri Legacy: the Civil War and the University of Missouri-Columbia," a play that will travel to schools this semester. Written by graduate student Tom Prater of Columbia, the play is set at the University in March 1862, when occupation by Union troops forced MU to close its doors. The play is sponsored by McDonald's of Mid-Missouri.

To request a calendar of Sesquicentennial events, call 882-1989.

DON'T GET BURNED OUT

If you've had problems with job burnout from time to time, a breakfast seminar Jan. 20 may provide some answers.

"Kill Job Burnout Before It Kills You" will be presented at 7:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Executive Center, 2200 I-70 Drive SW. The $15 fee includes breakfast.

Topics will include recognizing job burnout and learning to reduce the effects. Gloria Deckard, assistant professor of health services management, will present the seminar, which is sponsored by the Missouri Institute for Executive Development.

Reservations are required, and may be secured by calling 882-4803.

SMOKING CLINIC HAS A PLAN

Want to stop smoking but are not sure how to do it? The Smoking Clinic has some ideas.

The clinic, a research-funded program led by Mizzou graduate students in clinical psychology, has programs to help you stop smoking. The next program will begin Jan. 24 and will run for eight weeks. The cost is $50, but $40 of that is refundable.

With questions or to register, call 882-6485.

YOU MAY HELP, IF YOU HURRY

Time is running out, but you still may be able to give blood at Campus Facilities' winter blood drive.

The drive is from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Jan. 17 in the lower east concourse at the Hearnes Center.

"Drop-ins are welcome," says Mary Hulse, manager of payroll/personnel for Campus Facilities. "Blood is in short supply at this time of year, and your participation will be greatly appreciated."

Staff Council taps Schoonover as chairwoman

New Staff Advisory Council members and officers began another council year at their first meeting of the semester Jan. 12.

The council elected 1989 officers at its Dec. 8 meeting — the last one of the fall semester. Chairwoman is Suzanne Schoonover, administrative assistant in agricultural engineering. Schoonover was recorder last year. Other officers are Vice Chairwoman Pulletta King, supervisor of accounting data control in Accounting Services, and Recorder Linda Converse, coordinator of computing teleprocessing in Computing Services.

Outgoing Chairman Larry Windmoeller declined a nomination for his re-election, saying change was important for the council's success. King, who nominated Windmoeller, led a round of applause for his term in office. "You've done a great job, and I've enjoyed being on council with you as chairman," she said. King and Harold Lynch, former vice chairman, also declined nominations as council chairman. Lynch is a senior production technician with the Educational Resources Group in the School of Medicine.

"The council has made positive strides in the eyes of the administration, peers and other campus groups," Windmoeller said as he reflected on his year as chairman. "We're in a tough time now. I realize there are financial difficulties, but if we continue to approach things in a professional way, we'll make ground."

At the Jan. 12 meeting, the group heard of George Hough's resignation from the council. Hough, manager of the Intercollegiate Athletic ticket office, said work commitments prevented him from devoting time to the council. Lisa Wimmenauer, administrative associate II in Business Services, will complete the two years remaining in Hough's term. Wimmenauer was the runner-up in the administrative/professional category in the council's November election.

In other business, council member Michael Akers, senior stores clerk at University Hospital Plant Engineering, asked the council to investigate a rumor why hospital employees will not get raises from the $7.6 million in higher education funds released by Gov. John Ashcroft in December. (See Page 1.)

"We are employees of the University, but it seems like there's getting to be a wider and wider gap between the campus and the hospital," Akers said. The hospital has a separate budget from the University and receives its own state appropriation. King said she would try to get more information on the subject and will make a report at the council's Jan. 26 meeting.

Lynch reported on the last meeting of the UM System's retirement and staff benefits committee, of which he is a member. He said an ad-hoc, systemwide benefits committee requested last fall by President C. Peter Magrath has been formed. The president wants the group to consider changes in employee benefits.

"I don't want to throw a wet blanket on all our hard work on educational assistance, but unless the ad hoc group gets real excited about it, it's down the drain," Lynch said. For several years, Staff Council has urged extending educational benefits to employees' dependents. Currently, only employees may use the 75 percent fee reduction.

Lynch said the retirement committee voted on benefits to recommend to the ad hoc group. "Only two of us voted to recommend extending educational benefits," he said. "But it is on their agenda." Other retirement committee members said such a benefit would not help all staff members, Lynch said.

King suggested Staff Council's benefits committee make an effort to have Boone Hospital Center added as a preferred provider under University medical benefits. She also circulated results from the communication committee's Mizzou Weekly distribution survey. King is chairwoman of the committee. Mizzou Weekly will consider survey results to help improve distribution of the faculty and staff paper.

Chancellor addresses legislators

Mizzou has done an extraordinary job educating its students, Chancellor Haskell Monroe told members of the Missouri Senate Appropriations Committee Jan. 4. But further improvements would require more funding from the state, he added.

"MU graduates represent 60 percent of school superintendents in Missouri; one-third of all professional engineers; 84 percent of our state's veterinary medicine practitioners; and one of every seven certified teachers, more than any other school," Monroe said.

The chancellor made the comments at an unusual session called by state Sen. Roger Wilson, D-Columbia, chairman of the appropriations committee. Wilson invited 13 chancellors and presidents from Missouri colleges and universities to talk about their schools and the need for more funds.

"We have already reallocated," Monroe told the group. "We've closed programs. We eliminated one college this year, and we have postponed renovations and repairs. We can't do much more. We can't stretch the dollars much further."

Other needs were heard. Chancellor Martin Jischke of UM-Rolla said one-third of students who need financial aid cannot receive it because of a shortage of funds. Julio Leon, president of Missouri Southern State College in Joplin, said his institution received $750,000 in new computer equipment four years ago that today requires "a constant infusion of new funds, just to keep up with technology."

Shaile Aery, outgoing Missouri commissioner of higher education, said 229 academic programs were eliminated statewide from 1984 to 1988, but further streamlining would save no more than $10 million.

Monroe mentioned possible options. In Iowa, he said, the legislature voted to increase funding for higher education 30 percent over three years. "And substantial investments made several years ago in North Carolina, Florida and California are paying off today," he added. "The proof is a generation away."

The meeting resulted in no formal calls for more tax money. But Wilson was impressed, and urged further discussions between educators and legislators.

"In the last few years, we've had an extraordinary erosion of funds," he told the group. "We've had to pay the cost of more prisons. We've had to pay for public school desegregation. But your statements impress me, and collectively, you've made an impact. Higher education is doing very well with what we're giving it, but we're not giving it enough."

University striving to raise enrollment of summer school

The University is looking at ways to increase summer school enrollment, Vice Provost Jeff Chinn told Faculty Council Dec. 15.

"There's not enough money to do everything we'd like to do with summer school," Chinn said. "Increasing the numbers (of students) would increase our allocation."

Chinn said Mizzou's summer school enrollment traditionally has totaled about 30 percent of regular enrollment. That compares to a 40 percent to 45 percent rate at most other schools. "And in California it's as high as 50 percent," he added.

The University has adopted a weighted formula that allocates funds to schools and colleges based on the number of students enrolled and classes taught, Chinn told the council. Juniors and seniors make up the largest summer school group, followed by graduate students. Less than 10 percent of summer enrollees are freshmen and sophomores, he added.

Chinn said he plans to meet with the council's academic affairs committee to discuss the matter further. "It's premature to say where we might go with this, but we're looking for your input," he told the group. "We want summer school to work for all of us."

In other business, the council:

- was told a proposal to change general education requirements should be completed in March or April. Stuart Palonsky, associate professor of curriculum and instruction and chairman of the council's general education task force, said a draft proposal calls for increasing math and English requirements, and adding computer science and foreign language requirements. He expects the finished result to be similar to the draft. "It's just a beginning," he said. "We would like to establish an ongoing committee to look at this."
- was told Faculty Council's and Staff Council's joint employee benefits task force is examining the University's benefits package. "But we're still waiting for the UM systemwide benefits task force to meet," said task force Chairman Dick Dowdy, associate professor of human nutrition, foods and food systems management.

"We don't want to duplicate anything they're doing. Since they haven't met, we're wondering what our next move should be." He said his task force also is looking at "particular concerns," such as medical benefits. "If you have any topics, let us know," Dowdy added.

MAKING GOOD ON PHONE CALLS

If you believe you were unfairly charged for telephone calls made from campus phones between April and September last year, there may be a solution.

The University contracted with National Telephone Services to handle all operator (9-0) calls between April 22 and Sept. 24. If you have questions regarding bills from that company, mail or bring the bills to the Telecommunications Office, 5 Telecom Bldg., 920 College Ave. If you placed your calls from the Health Sciences Center, refer your bills to the Hospital Telecommunications Office, GW-02 Hospital and Clinics.

Your bill will be compared with applicable AT&T rates, and you will receive any refund. Refund requests will be accepted through March 10.

With questions, call 882-2177.

GIVE A STUDENT A BIG BOOST

Summer Welcome '89 is looking for student orientation leaders, and faculty and staff may be able to help.

"If you know of a student who you believe would make a good orientation leader, tell that student to contact us," says Denise Schlake, director of new student and parent programs. The student should attend informational meetings at 4 p.m. Jan. 18 or at 6:30 p.m. Jan. 19, both in Memorial Union Auditorium. The faculty or staff member also will be asked to complete a referral form.

STAFF SUBMIT FAVORITE RECIPES

The staff of University Libraries is cooking up some good food ideas for you.

The MU Library Staff Association is selling cookbooks for $5. Recipes are from the staff of the libraries, and from their families and friends. "Everything from bread pudding to quiche Lorraine is included," says Oleta Edwards, library assistant II and cookbook coordinator.

For more information or to buy a book, call Edwards at 882-4338.

Assessment report OK'd

Mizzou's faculty overwhelmingly approves of a task force report on student assessment. And Faculty Council Chairman Gordon Kimber couldn't be happier.

"I think these results are significant," Kimber says. "It's not often that we go to the full faculty with a mail ballot, but assessment is a matter of great concern."

A council committee spent almost a year preparing the report, which is composed of a 13-page text, a thick packet of appendices and 17 specific recommendations. The council adopted the report in October and sent copies to all full-time faculty for a vote.

Of 615 faculty members who returned ballots — a 44 percent response — 567 supported the recommendations, 47 were opposed and one left the ballot blank, Kimber says.

Among the recommendations are that assessment policies be undertaken primarily by Faculty Council-appointed committees; that general education testing be implemented on a selective and voluntary basis; that test scores be utilized for program improvements, not for institutional comparisons or campus funding requests; and that students' test results not be made public.

Vice Provost Jeff Chinn says the administration can work with the recommendations. Adds Kimber: "We will try our best to have these ideas implemented."

Irvin named to interim post

James A. Irvin, director of counseling services at the University, has been appointed interim vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services. Chancellor Haskell Monroe announced the appointment Dec. 22.

Irvin will serve in the interim post until a successor is found to replace Norman Moore, who resigned in November to become vice chancellor for student affairs at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge.

The chancellor also proposed that the name of the office be changed to student services. "The appointment of a new vice chancellor gives us an opportunity to look at the organization and function of that area," Deputy Chancellor Gerald Brouder says. "If approved, the name change to student services will reflect any changes in the function of that office."

Administrators are considering moving auxiliary services, such as parking and the golf course, under the jurisdiction of the vice chancellor for Administrative Services. "Before the end of the month, we'll try to work out where other areas will report," Brouder says. "We'll have to have a clear idea of what the job will entail before we advertise it."

Faculty, staff and students will be selected for a search committee that will look for Moore's replacement. Brouder expects a successor to be named by fall. Until then, Irvin will serve as interim vice chancellor, a job he had for nine months before Moore was hired in 1979. Irvin has been director of counseling services since 1975 and maintains a teaching, research and administrative role as a tenured faculty member in the Department of Health Services Management.

Finalists named in searches for two deans

A search committee has recommended five finalists for dean of the College of Arts and Science. The finalists will visit campus in January and early February.

Contenders are MU Theater Department Chairman Larry D. Clark, who is serving as interim dean of the college; David K. Hoffman, chairman of the chemistry department at Iowa State University; John Ruffin, dean of the college of arts and sciences at North Carolina State University at Durham; Laura S. Struminger, vice provost for academic planning and professor of history at the University of Cincinnati; and Susan Welch, Hapold professor of political science at the University of Nebraska.

Finalists are vying to fill the position vacated by Milton Glick, who left last spring to become provost at Iowa State University. The search committee selected the five finalists from a pool of 77 candidates.

Other dean searches are continuing, says Provost Lois DeFleur. In December, the School of Journalism announced six finalists for its dean opening. Dean James D. Atwater will resign in May. On-campus interviews began Jan. 10.

Finalists are Maurine Hoffman Beasley, a journalism professor at the University of Maryland; Thomas A. Bowers, associate dean of journalism at the University of North Carolina; Dean Mills, a communications professor at California State University-Fullerton; Will Norton Jr., journalism department chairman at the University of Mississippi; Gerald C. Stone, professor and former journalism department chairman at Memphis State University; and D. Charles Whitney, a researcher at the Institute of Communications Research and a journalism professor at the University of Illinois.

DeFleur says she hopes the journalism and arts and science searches will wind up this spring. But while final steps are taken to fill those positions, search committees in nursing, and business and public administration are still considering candidates.

Nursing Dean Phyllis Drennan will retire in August. DeFleur has said she wants to appoint a successor by September. Business Dean Stanley J. Hille resigned last March to take a similar position at Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton. Robert Penfield, associate professor of management, is serving as interim dean.

This latest round of dean searches began in September 1987, when School of Medicine Dean Michael Whitcomb announced his resignation. He left campus in December 1987 to become dean of the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle. His replacement, Lester R. Bryant, began work Jan. 2. Last fall MU law Professor Timothy J. Heinsz replaced Dale Whitman as law dean. Whitman, who has returned to teaching and conducting research at Mizzou, resigned as dean Oct. 6, 1987.

Filling the vacated dean posts requires a "tremendous amount of work on everyone's part," DeFleur says. "It's our top priority."

A jogging track suspended over new wood-floor basketball courts is one of the features of the renovated Student Recreation Center, which opened last week.

Revamped gym opens with hoopla

In conjunction with the Sesquicentennial Celebration, the renovated and expanded Brewer-Rothwell Gymnasium was officially unveiled during a 4 p.m. Jan. 13 ribbon-cutting ceremony.

The gym has been named the Student Recreation Center in honor of student funds that are helping to finance the building.

The ceremony culminated a week of festivities that included basketball and volleyball playoffs and aerobics demonstrations. The $5-million expansion and renovation includes six additional wood-floor basketball/volleyball courts; five additional racquetball courts and one squash court; a suspended jogging track with banked turns; air-conditioned exercise, aerobic and weight rooms; and a new equipment room.

The center is open to MU students, faculty and staff and their immediate families. Alumni also may use the center, although a user fee will be assessed. To help retire the construction debt, students voted to increase student activity fees to $10 a semester during construction and $20 a semester after the center opened. Faculty and staff user fees have yet to be decided by Chancellor Haskell Monroe. Until a decision is made, employees may use the center at no cost. Students and employees must show their University IDs to enter the gym.

To reserve a racquetball, squash or volleyball court, call 882-2067 between 9 a.m. and noon. Phone reservations are taken one day in advance Mondays through Thursdays. If no reservation is made for the squash court, it becomes open for those on that hour's racquetball waiting list. Walk-in court reservations can be made one day in advance beginning at 4:30 p.m. weekdays and noon weekends at the equipment room.

For folks who want to pump a little iron, free weights and weight machines are available throughout the day in the second-floor exercise areas. Basketball court space also is available throughout the day. For aerobic fans, a new punch card admission system allows users to choose convenient class times. A 25-session punch card costs $30 for faculty and staff, $20 for students. A 12-session pass costs $15 for employees, $10 for students. The faculty and staff rates may change if a user fee is implemented. Punch cards may be purchased at 106 Rothwell Gym.

The center is open from 6 a.m. to 11:45 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays. On Fridays, it opens at 6 a.m. and closes at 10 p.m. Weekend hours are 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Smoking is not allowed in the Student Recreation Center. For complete information, call the center at 882-2066.

Recruiting efforts up

The University is making strides in its efforts to recruit more minority graduate students, Charles Sampson, associate dean of the Graduate School, told about 75 people at the Dec. 13 Mizzou Administrative Forum.

Sampson said the University is widely publicizing its Ridgel Fellowship Program, which offers stipends to minority masters and doctoral students. The Graduate School also is writing letters to the 1,900 minority students who took the Graduate Record Examination last year and is visiting other college campuses to try to lure potential minority graduate students here.

Sampson displayed graphs showing that although the number of Hispanic and Asian graduate students at Mizzou declined from 1987 to 1988, the number of black graduate students rose significantly. "Overall, we did better than the year before, and we hope to do even better this year," he added.

Also at the forum:

•Ted Tarkow, associate dean of arts and science, said Mizzou will again be the host for the Missouri Scholars Academy, scheduled June 11 through July 1 this year. "We've had it five years and are happy to have it again," he said. The event draws 300 of the state's top high-school juniors to campus for classes, workshops and recreational activities.

•Norman Moore, former vice chancellor for Student, Personnel and Auxiliary Services, praised Mizzou's student fee capital improvements program. The program is paying for a number of projects on campus, including the refurbished Student Recreation Center. Moore left MU in December for a new job at Louisiana State University. Chancellor Haskell Monroe thanked Moore for his work at Mizzou. "We are grateful for eight years of your service," Monroe said.

•Monroe told the group that the University's traditional designation, MU, may now be used officially. For the past 20 years, the use of UMC has been allowed but MU has not. "Don't throw anything away that has UMC on it, but replace that with MU when the time is appropriate," Monroe said. "We want the use of MU to become a habit. It says we are THE public university in the state."

•Monroe told the group of two new publications: the 1989-90 Mizzou International Directory, available through Extension Publications, and a 1989 Sesquicentennial calendar, available through the University Events office. He especially praised the directory, which lists the international consulting and research experiences of MU faculty members. "I can see where this would be useful to a business in Missouri, for example, that is looking to expand in international markets," Monroe said. "It would tell them of resources available here that could help."

DeFleur selects Denhardt to be new vice provost

Following a campus search, Robert B. Denhardt, research professor of public administration, has been selected vice provost for budget and operations, Provost Lois DeFleur has announced. Gerald Brouder served in that office until Feb. 1, 1988, when he became deputy chancellor.

Duties of the vice provost for budget and operations include preparing budget narratives and program improvement requests, assisting in formulation, implementation and evaluation of academic budgets, and representing the provost in matters pertaining to construction, renovation and space allocation.

In addition to his faculty position, Denhardt was associate dean of the College of Business and Public Administration from 1981 to 1983. He is chairman of the Governor's Advisory Council on Productivity and is immediate past president of the American Society for Public Administration. The author or editor of two books and several scholarly articles, he is on the editorial boards of Administration and Society and the Public Productivity Review.

Before joining the MU faculty in 1980 as chairman of the Department of Public Administration, Denhardt taught at the University of Kansas and at the University of New Orleans.

Q&A

Q. I am outraged at the destruction of the lilacs and other flowering bushes along Ninth Street between Swallow Hall and Tate Hall. What is the purpose? Also, why were the shrubs around the perimeter of Francis Quadrangle pulled up? They looked perfectly healthy. Were they destroyed or replanted? It is insulting to see money wasted this way, and it's disheartening to see the destruction of the more pleasing parts of our environment.

A. "The majority of the bushes near Ninth Street and Tate and Swallow halls, some of which were lilacs, were removed because they had been walked through and broken down, and, in general, created a safety concern and were difficult to maintain," says Phil Shocklee, assistant director of Campus Facilities. "These bushes were replaced with a low hedge along Ninth Street, with a post and chain barrier to restrict pedestrian traffic. Some of these bushes were kept and will be replanted in other campus locations."

Regarding the shrubs around the perimeter of the Quadrangle, Shocklee says the plants were removed this fall when the Quad was reseeded. "These shrubs were originally planted in an effort to restrict pedestrian traffic across the Quadrangle. They had been walked on and partially destroyed and were not reused because of that."

Q. The picture and short description of "Live Oak" in the Dec. 6 Mizzou Weekly was sorely needed in an earlier issue. Every semester, I search for a description of the productions being done by University Theater. Nothing is ever listed except the title. Why can't University Theater provide a short description of each production? I believe it would increase their business rather than decrease it. Many people are like me: They don't want to spend their time or money attending a play they may not enjoy. I have learned of many plays that I would have attended, if I had known what they were about. "Live Oak" was one of them.

A. "The 'Live Oak' photograph appeared in the Dec. 6 issue because we did not publish a Mizzou Weekly the week before — the week after Thanksgiving break — and the photo was not available for the previous issue on Nov. 22," says Terry Jordan, Mizzou Weekly editor.

"The writer has a good suggestion, and we will try to provide more information as space allows. However, that information may appear in the Calendar listings, since we do not always run photos of University Theater plays. In the long run, I would advise anyone interested in plays to contact the Theater Department at 882-2021. They will be happy to send a brochure that includes descriptions of that season's plays, as well as dates and costs."

Q. Here we go again with more questions concerning the smoking policy. It was my understanding that the smoking policy was designed to keep smoke away from areas where non-smokers are most likely to be. Often the main entrance to a building is the designated smoking area. Isn't that the worst place to allow smoking since most people who come into a building enter through the main door?

In Whitten Hall there is a bright no-smoking sign placed on the glass of the back door leading to the basement, yet when one enters the door, there is usually someone sitting not more than 6 feet from the door smoking. The designated smoking area of Waters Hall is the entryway at the northwest door. This is the area just before the large auditorium where most people enter the building. Lastly, what about Memorial Union? The entire length of the first floor, north wing hallway is devoted to smokers. Why can't smoking areas be designated in places where people will not be forced to inhale smoke just because they need to enter a building?

A. "We don't like to use hallways and entryways but, unfortunately, in some buildings we have no choice," says Brent Mattox, industrial hygienist with Environmental Health and Safety. Representatives from that department have visited most campus buildings to designate smoking areas. Hallways and lobbies often offer the best ventilation. Smoking is completely prohibited in some buildings, but "if there are a lot of people who smoke in the building or if it's a high public access area like Memorial Union, then we have to have one," Mattox says.

Building coordinators monitor complaints and report them to Environmental Health and Safety. If there is a problem with a designated area, it could be moved. Thus far, Mattox says his office has not received many complaints. "This is an on-going process. As offices and ventilation patterns move, we may have to change some smoking areas," Mattox says.

For instance, in Whitten Hall, building coordinator Bill Blackwell says the basement area by the back door is the designated smoking area because "it's the best ventilated spot in the building. It's the farthest away from any offices, and there's a window that can be opened in the summer." The no-smoking sign posted on the back door indicates that smoking is not allowed in the building except in the designated area. With questions, employees should call the appropriate building coordinator.
