MU earns two major national awards for undergraduate education.

Mizzou's national standing was recognized over the past week when MU brought home two top awards for its undergraduate education efforts.

MU's general education program received the Theodore M. Hesburgh

'This prestigious award is a fitting tribute to your University's unwavering commitment to educational achievement.'

President Bill Clinton

Award Feb. 24 during the American Council on Education's annual meeting in Washington, D.C. Just a few days earlier, the National Science Foundation recognized MU, along with nine other universities, as a research-intensive university that has made a substantial and successful commitment to integrate research and education for undergraduates.

The Hesburgh Award was presented before a group of top education and government officials, including Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott. MU's general education program was cited as a proven model for successful, innovative faculty development programs that enhance undergraduate teaching and student learning.

President Bill Clinton spoke to the group after the award ceremony and congratulated MU in a letter to interim Chancellor Richard Wallace. "This prestigious award is a fitting tribute to your University's unwavering commitment to educational achievement," Clinton wrote. "At a time when institutions of higher learning across our nation face difficult choices both academically and financially, your commitment to education and to America's students has stood firm. With vision and creativity, you are revitalizing education in America and empowering our students with the skills and knowledge they need to succeed."

In accepting the award, interim Chancellor Richard Wallace said, "I am particularly proud of our general education program. It encompasses most of the academic divisions of the University, and we have been fortunate to have exceptionally able and dedicated faculty leaders who have moved liberal arts education to a breadth, depth, and quality commensurate with a major public, research, land-grant university."

The Hesburgh Award was created by the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund (TIAA-CREF), to identify institutions with stellar programs that inspire the growth of such initiatives at other American colleges and universities. The award is named in honor of renowned educator Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame.

The general education program involves faculty and students in a process that ensures each MU graduate, regardless of major, receives a broad-based education upon graduation.

Beginning in 1986, through a series of task forces and open hearings, the University formulated a new framework for the undergraduate experience. The first step was to revise the curriculum and requirements to ensure that all students receive a solid background in liberal arts and sciences, including ample coverage of diversity. The other challenge was to persuade faculty to reach beyond curricular development, to endorse the changes and to participate fully in their

Home-grown experience

Jo Turner has a life-long interest in Missouri's 4-H youth program.

When she joined her community's 4-H club as a 9-year-old, Jo Turner had no idea where it would take her. All she knew was that she liked learning about sewing, cooking, camping and leadership. She didn't know she eventually would work her way up to become statewide director of the 4-H program.

Turner's experience in 4-H has spanned 35 years. It started in 1962 when she joined a club in the Boone County community of Straun. In 1976, Turner became the 4-H youth specialist for Boone County. In February 1996, after serving nine years as a statewide extension youth specialist, Turner came to MU as interim director of 4-H. She was named to her current position in September.

Missouri's 4-H program is sponsored by the University of Missouri Extension, Lincoln University, county governments and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. As an MU staff member, Turner determines issues and trends that will be important to 4-H clubs statewide. She works in a cooperative partnership with the University of Missouri system and local 4-H youth specialists.

"The biggest challenge is looking at national trends and figuring out what issues will affect the communities across the state," she says. For instance, the trend toward working parents prompted 4-H to develop after-school child care programs.

To help Turner with such initiatives, five MU faculty members coordinate 4-H programs statewide. But these faculty members don't work alone. As 4-H develops new programs and curricula, it draws on almost all of MU's academic departments to find the research-based resources it needs. For example, the College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources helps develop

4-H, the largest out-of-school youth organization, is a partnership between federal, state and county governments. As statewide director, Jo Turner coordinates initiatives to improve life in Missouri.

4-H projects about forestry, protecting the environment and evaluating wildlife habitat. When it comes to projects about pet care and raising cattle, Turner looks to the College of Veterinary Medicine for up-to-date information.

Since the first Missouri club formed in 1914 in Iron

County, many things have changed with the nation's largest out-of-school youth organization. While the program's main focus is still to spread information about the new technology and research developments from land-grant universities—like MU—to area schools, the topics and methods of teaching have changed.

When the 4-H program started, most people lived in rural areas and were either farmers or homemakers. Back then, local clubs taught school-age children practical skills about crops, cattle, canning and child care, to name a few.

The 4-H program changed as the nation changed. During the Great Depression, 4-H clubs taught children how to recycle old clothes and other household materials. During World War II, club activities centered around planting victory gardens and collecting metal for the war effort.

That ability to change is still present today. Because most people live in urban areas and are faced with different challenges, 4-H offers programs about caring for the environment, preparing for future careers, avoiding conflict with peers and staying in school. In the future, projects will probably include computers, distance learning and global connections, says Turner.

Topics are not the only thing that have changed over the years. The nature of 4-H involvement has also undergone a transition. Most school children are not exposed to 4-H through traditional after-school clubs, but right in the classroom. Through education enrichment courses, the 4-H program provides materials, curriculum and teaching training.

"Our challenge is to figure out which niche we can fill at school, so we don't duplicate what they are already doing," says Turner, noting that most schools are looking for science projects.

And they certainly are coming back to 4-H. In 1996, more than 180,000 Missouri youth were involved in the program. Each year between 2,000 and 3,000 of those kids visit MU. Whether for a competition or a seminar, this experience gives children a taste of college life and plants a seed in their mind early on. "When these kids come to MU, they get a sense of ownership, like this is their campus," says Turner. "Students decide that not only do they want to attend college, but that they want to go to Mizzou."

RECOGNIZING OUR RETIREES

It's time to honor MU retirees for their accomplishments since leaving the University. The 1997 Retirees Week will be held April 7-11. Departments on campus are encouraged to plan events for retirees, which could include receptions, parties or tours. Each year, the chancellor's advisory committee on retired faculty and staff sponsors two $500 awards; one for a retired staff member and one for retired faculty. The awards will be presented April 10 at the annual retiree luncheon.

The award program's goal is to reward retirees who have demonstrated unusual accomplishments in retirement, to enhance recognition of retiree accomplishments within the academic community, and to encourage retirees to become involved in rewarding activities.

Criteria for the awards are accomplishments during retirement, and may include service to the University, career or professional activities and volunteer civic or welfare services. Nominees must be retired from the University for at least five years. Deadline for nominations is March 7.

Nomination forms are available from the MU Business Services office in 311 Jesse Hall.

36 YEARS AND COUNTING

A special chemistry "symposium" and roast will honor retiring chemistry professor John Bauman. Beginning at 2 p.m. Feb. 28 in 103 Schlundt Hall, his colleagues and former students will speak on various chemistry topics and relate anecdotes about Bauman's 36-year career at MU. A reception follows at 4:30 p.m. in N201-202 Memorial Union for Bauman's friends, colleagues, and current and former students.

STORM SIGNALS

The sirens will sound next Tuesday at 1:30 p.m., but there's no cause for alarm. MU will be taking part in a statewide severe weather exercise March 4 as Missouri's tomoado season approaches. An alternate date for the drill has been set for 1:30 p.m. March 6. With questions, call Ray Morrison at 882-7018.

Parking
& Transportation Services
Turner Avenue Garage
Level 2

implementation in the classroom.

"The viability of MU's general education program grows out of the intelligence and vision of the original concept, the hard work and common sense of the faculty and student steering committees, the cooperation and good will of the many faculty who teach the various components, and the support of the administrators and staff who back them up," said Gilbert Porter, director of the General Education Program and professor of English.

Support for and commitment to the program are evidenced by the impressive faculty participation. More than 1,700 faculty teach the general education courses each year. Institutional support has also been strong from the inception of the program and has grown steadily.

The outcomes of the program have been gratifying. Some of the results seen thus far include better academic preparation of graduates, higher levels of satisfaction with students' educational experience, a breakdown of barriers between disciplines and improved attitudes toward teaching.

Outside assessments of the general education program also have been positive. Victoria Weiss, recent president of the American Association for the Advancement of Core Curriculum, said, "The program should serve as a model for other large state universities. It's rare to find an undergraduate curriculum that integrates the disciplines the way MU's does, one that invites students to make interdisciplinary connections for themselves. That's truly what an undergraduate education is all about."

The separate award from the National Science Foundation, never conferred before, was given to recognize the commitment and accomplishments of research-intensive universities, and recognizes the more than 200 MU faculty members working with students over the past several years in undergraduate research education. The recognition carries a $500,000 award to be used for continuing work in this area.

"This new award testifies that MU has done a superb job of providing to undergraduates the benefits of working with scientists at the boundaries of their fields and thus engaging them directly in the excitement of discovery, of creating new knowledge," said Mel George, UM System interim president. "This is wonderful recognition for the efforts of many faculty and administrators across the Columbia campus who are correctly convinced that research and quality undergraduate education can indeed go hand in hand. I am very proud."

Going global

In the first major conference of its kind held in Missouri, representatives from nearly 20 public and private colleges and universities around the state will gather at Mizzou next week to help boost international education for undergraduate students.

The conference, titled "Strategic Alliances to Internationalize the Undergraduate Experience" will be held March 4 and 5. The conference is hosted by MU and was organized by the campus Council on International Initiatives.

"This conference will be an opportunity to pool our resources and share our expertise as we consider ways to work together," says Kitty Dickerson, chair of MU's international council and professor of textile and apparel management.

Speakers will include Mel George, UM System interim president, Raymond Bentele, former head of the Mallinckrodt Group; Missouri state treasurer Bob Holden; Kala Stroup, Missouri commissioner for higher education; and Ting-Wong Cheng, president of National Chengchi University in Taiwan. A poster session will run throughout the conference in Stotler Lounge on the main level of Memorial Union North.

"What we hope will come out of this conference is an increased awareness of the resources available to people who want to internationalize their undergraduate experience," says John Heyl, director of MU's International Center. "We would like to help people develop partnerships that will carry on when the conference is over."

Come to our open house and see the future . . .

Lab Exhibits '97

Thursday, February 27 • 11 a.m. - 7 p.m.

If you wandered by the College of Engineering today, you would see hundreds of young students gazing wide-eyed at innovations such as a concrete canoe, virtual reality demonstrations and a solar-powered car.

Lab Exhibits are open until 7 p.m. Avoid the crowds and come by this afternoon or this evening — and experience the future for yourself.

Lab Exhibits will be in the Engineering Buildings East and West — Sixth Street and Stewart Road. Tours of the exhibits will take one to two hours.

A PROUD TRADITION, STARTED BY UNIVERSITY FACULTY.

At University Bookstore we are honored to continue the legacy of some of the most influential educators in Mizzou history.

The University owned and operated bookstore they created in 1899 as the University Co-operative Store continues to serve Mizzou students today in Brady Commons. We would like to think the countless patrons the University Bookstore has served through the years have received the kind of value, selection and service that the original founders had hoped for. The professional and student staff of University Bookstore invite you to help celebrate the heritage of our University owned and operated store. We proudly remain the only bookstore serving Mizzou where all profits go toward student services, facilities and programming.
